GIANTS WIN THIRD ON STENGEL'S HOMER BEFORE 62,430 FANS

Crowd in Yankee Stadium Breaks All Records, With 25,000 Turned Away.

VETERAN SCORES ONLY RUN

"Casey" Repeats His Feat of Wednesday, While Nehf Holds American Leaguers to 6 Hits.

FOUR IS ALL JONES ALLOWS

Bob Meusel's Disregard of Orders Ends Yankees' One Chance to Tally —Pipp Hurts Ankle Again.

Casey Stengel knocked out another home run at the Yankee Stadium yesterday afternoon, winning the third game of the world series for the Giants by the score of 1 to 0 and giving the Giants a lead in the series of two games to one. Casey's homer yesterday made baseball history, as did his four-bagger in the ninth inning of the first game on Wednesday with the score tied, but yesterday's homer had the added distinction of setting a new series record in being the first time that a solitary home run was the only score in a world series game.

But all the glory of winning the third game does not go to Stengel alone. Arthur Nehf pitched the best ball of his career for the Giants in keeping the powerful Yankees, including the mighty Babe Ruth, scoreless, allowing them only six scattered hits. Sam Jones, who pitched for Miller Huggins, although defeated, comes in also for a share of the honors of the day. He pitched almost perfect baseball throughout, allowing only four hits and keeping the Giants scoreless except for Stengel's homer.

These feats of prowess, however, were not nearly so amazing as the size of the crowd that watched them. The paid attendance figures reached the record-breaking total of 62,430 police, newspaper men and employes would presably raise this figure to 66,000—and the sum of money taken in at the gate was more than a fifth of a million, $301,073.40 to be exact. Not only was every seat filled with hundreds standing, but 25,000 other frenzied fans stormed the gates of the park and couldn't get in. The police, who were hard pressed to keep back the raging mob, estimated later that 100,000 persons had tried to see the game, making it the greatest outpouring of baseball fans in history.

Great Crush Outside Stadium.

When the game started at 2 o'clock there were still several thousand reserved ticket holders trying to wedge through the turnstiles, and beyond the police lines two blocks away many more thousands were standing. For a time the stream of taxicabs and private cars was so thick that traffic was practically suspended until the police could untangle it. Fifteen minutes from game time a line of automobiles stretched across the bridge, up the 155th Street viaduct and west as far as St. Nicholas Avenue with not a wheel moving. East of the Stadium traffic conditions were easier, but even there those who were in a hurry found it simpler to abandon their cars and walk to the Stadium.

When the last man had got in and the police had ordered the gates closed, the crowd inside the Yankee park was the largest in baseball history. Nothing else comes near it. At a double-header between the Yankees and Cleveland on Sunday, Sept. 16, 60,331 paid their way in and established a record. Next to that in point of size was the opening day throng of the present series, which numbered 55,307. For the first time, also, baseball receipts reached the $200,000 mark.

Even after Stengel had driven out his homer and won the game misfortune did not finish stalking on the heels of the Yankees. The American League champions lost not only the ball game, but also their first baseman, Wally Pipp, who jumped savagely into second base in the seventh inning, twisted his already injured right ankle and put himself out of the game. He may not be able to play any more this year, for his ankle was cruelly damaged and he was barely able to limp off the field.

This was one tragedy for the Yankees, and in the fourth inning there was another. With none out and runners on first and second, Bob Meusel was explicitly ordered by Miller Huggins to bunt and thus advance the runners. Disregarding the instructions of his manager, Meusel swung freely and fully at the first ball pitched and hit into a double play that wiped out the rally as effectively as an earthquake could have done. To twist an ankle is bad luck, but to disregard orders is worse, and it was disregard of orders that spoiled a Yankee chance to win what may prove to be the decisive game of the series.

Meusel's Blunder Costly.

If Meusel had bunted and presumably advanced the runners to second and third, Joe Dugan most certainly would have scored from the latter base on the slow grounder that Pipp hit immediately to Frisch if Dugan had scored the game would have been tied, and the Yankees might have won. As it was, Pipp's grounder was merely the third out.

In the army in time of war Meusel would have been court-martialed and shot at sunrise. But baseball sentences are lighter. Probably Miller Huggins,

GOV. WALTON OUSTS TWO CLOSE ADVISERS

Breaks With Counselor and Banking Chief Because Their Friend, Gore, Criticized Him.

HOUSE SEEKS THEIR STORY

Calls Pair to Impeachment Inquiry—Lower Branch Hunts Graft in Its Own Ranks.

Special to The New York Times.

OKLAHOMA CITY, Oct. 12.—On the heels of the announcement today in the lower house of the Legislature that the committee had been chosen which will conduct an impeachment investigation against him, Governor J. C. Walton broke with two of his closest advisers and ousted them from office.

The Governor announced tonight that he had removed Aldrich Blake, the executive counselor, and E. T. Bynum, the Banking Commissioner. The speech which former Senator Thomas P. Gore delivered yesterday before the joint session of the Legislature was responsible for the break between the Governor and his lieutenants. Mr. Gore, who supported Walton for Governor, criticised the Administration in strong terms. Mr. Blake was the manager of Gore's losing campaign for the Senate in 1920 and is a former secretary of the blind Senator.

Mr. Bynum also is a Gore partisan. One of the charges against Governor Walton is that he violated the law in appointing Mr. Bynum to be Banking Commissioner. The law requires that holders of that office shall have had at least three years banking experience. Mr. Bynum did not have such experience.

When the ousting of the two officials was announced today, the opposition to the Governor state that both Mr. Blake and Mr. Bynum will be subpoenaed to appear before the legislative investigating committee.

Demand General Graft Inquiry.

A debate which probably has few parallels was staged on the floor of the lower house this afternoon. If half of what was hinted or openly charged is true, this State has been for years a hotbed of official corruption, the beneficiaries of which included not only high executive officials, but members of the Legislature and persons in less important positions.

The House was continuously in uproar, due to the introduction of a resolution by Representative Allen Street which called for an investigation of members of the present House of Representatives who, it is alleged, have trafficked in pardons and paroles) or have in other ways enriched themselves at the expense of the taxpayers.

Proponents of the Street resolution argued that, regardless of who was hit, the time had come to act. It was asserted that grave charges have been made against members of the House, involving road building contracts, irregularities in connection with the placing of State insurance, the placing on the State payroll of members of the families of legislators, and various other offenses, some grave and others of a minor character.

Almost from the day Oklahoma became a State graft has been in evidence, it was declared, and now, as David Stovall, the Democratic floor leader, declared, "the hour is at hand for Oklahoma to come clean."

Immediately after Mr. Street had sent his resolution to the clerk James Nance, a Walton leader, was on his feet with an amendment extending the inquiry to include the activities of members of this Legislature who were also members of preceding Legislatures.

Mr. Nance declared that the scandal dates back to a time long before Walton was ever heard of. In the previous Administration there were issued by Governor Robertson more than 1,700 pardons and paroles.

The talk involving road affairs is also of very old origin so far as this Admin-

DRESDEN, Oct. 12.—The sharpest defense against all dictatorship plans, seizure of real values, control of production and maintainance of the eight-hour day are the outstanding points made by the radical Saxon Minister President, Dr. Zeigner, on the debut of the new Socalist-Communist Coalition Cabinet in the Saxon Parliament today.

Red Saxony hurled her gauntlet of defiance at the present Reich Government as well as at Bavaria. After the new Communist finance and economic Ministers, against whose appointment the Berlin Government had strongly and vainly protested, had taken the oath of office, the new Red Government of "Soviet Saxony" went snappily into office.

All approaches of the Landtag Building were heavily guarded by the police. Huge crowds gathered without and the galleries within were crowded to suffocation.

As a hors d'oeuvre the Communist Sievert whet the public's appetite by a sensational charge that yesterday 1,000 members of the reactionary organizations Werwolf and Stahlhelm had been mustered into Reichswehr regiment 171 in Dresden, uniformed and armed by the regiment, and that another 1,000 so-called "Black Reichswehr" would be mustered in, armed and equipped today.

For five minutes the Saxon Parliament was in an uproar, then Minister President Zeigner made the following important Government declaration:

"The newly formed Government is a government of republican and proletarian defense. The working masses of all Germany are most gravely menaced. Von Kahr and Count Westarp have sounded the slogan, 'Down with Marxism,' and thereby declared war not only on Socialism and labor, but all the proletarian and republican strata of the population. These circles behind the Bavarian State Commissioner General and the German National Party hardly longer veil their economic and military preparations for crushing the working population. Capital, industry, finance and agriculture have launched the offensive. Many thousand workers and employes have been thrown on the street. The hunger cure is to make them an easy prey for the exploitation campaign of the overlords. Industrial circles in the Ruhr dictate the ten-hour day at the same time that they negotiate with the French occupation authorities in a hardly veiled intent to support themselves on foreign bayonets against the German workers.

Defense of Workers' Interests.

"The collapse policy of these circles is to be veiled at home and abroad and the frightful damage caused by the policy passed onto the working masses. Against this the Saxon Government declares it will at all times feel itself as a Government of the whole working population and act accordingly. Its special care will be for the poorest of the poor, for all the proletarian strata who without State protection must go to ruin.

"Toward the Reich the Saxon Government will energetically champion economic and financial measures to check the ruin of the mark, of our finances and our whole economic and cultural force. Energetically we shall champion seizure of real values, control of production, maintenance of the eight-hour day and rights of the workers, above all Betriebsräte, and labor union rights will be defended and extended. Within the realm of its power this Government will with all means take action against closing down works and plants, and it will continue to urge on the Reich Government the granting of adequate unemployment and part-time employment

Gompers, at 73, Again Heads Federation; Says Ousting of Reds Aids Cause of Labor

PORTLAND, Ore., Oct. 12 (Associated Press).—Samuel Gompers, re-elected unanimously at the age of 73 as President of the American Federation of Labor just before the adjournment of the forty-third annual convention today, declared in his closing address that the gathering had given notice that a cleavage had been made between those loyal to organized labor and those who, boring from within, had sought to stab the labor movement in the back.

"The results of this convention," he said," will make for solidarity in the ranks of labor."

The convention came to an exciting close in a sharp contest for the honor of entertaining the next convention in which El Paso won over Detroit by a vote of 14,588 to 12,684.

All the present officers of the Federation were re-elected.

President Gompers, in reviewing the convention's work, referred to the expulsion of William F. Dunne, delegate from Butte, Mont.

"This is a convention of organized labor," he said, "and any man who is hostile to labor has no right in this convention. I feel that the action taken has clarified the atmosphere. I think we have been entirely too lenient toward those who have been boring from within.

"Those men who meet at midnight in the forest, plotting not only against the Government but against the labor movement, can go ahead as they please, but they must do so outside the ranks of organized labor."

"The American Bankers Association," said Mr. Gompers as a parting remark, "at its last convention insisted that there must be a wage reduction and as a remedy suggested that the floodgates of immigration should be opened. I submit that if there is a movement to reduce incomes why do not these bankers start with themselves?"

At the closing session the convention approved a resolution calling for an investigation of charges that the present Government of Venezuela was dictatorial and inquisitorial, and that American citizens had been among prisoners confined in loathsome dungeons. If the charges were found to be true steps toward haverance of relations between Venezuela and other American countries should be urged, the resolution declared.

Mayor, Still Ill, Wants to Vote on Nov. 6; Will Seek Court Permit to Register in Bed

Although still in bed with an illness that nearly proved fatal, Mayor John F. Hylan, yesterday felt that he would be well enough to vote at the election on Nov. 6, and steps were taken to have him register at his home, if that is found to be legally possible. Application will be made today to a Supreme Court Justice for an order permitting this to be done.

The Mayor brought up the question of registration with his physician, Dr. John A. Ferguson, saying that probably he would be well enough on election day.

"It is too bad," Dr. Ferguson replied. "But don't worry about it. It would get you too excited."

"The disappointment of not being able to register would cause me more excitement," the Mayor replied.

This remark led Dr. Ferguson to consult John F. Sinnott, the Mayor's son-in-law and secretary, and William F. Delaney, the Democratic leader of the Twentieth Brooklyn Assembly District, who will make an application for an order to enable the Mayor to register today.

The Mayor continued to improve slightly yesterday. Dr. Ferguson said he rested and ate well, and that his pulse, temperature and respiration remained normal.

KILLED BY GOLF CLUB IN HANDS OF FRIEND

Bank Employe's Head Crushed by Backward Swing of Fellow-Player.

STOOD TOO CLOSE TO HIM

Raritan Valley Country Club Links Scene of Tragedy—Victim a Novice.

Special to The New York Times.

SOMERVILLE, N. J., Oct. 12.—Clarence E. Reed, employed by the United States Trust Company, New York, who was learning golf today on the links of the Raritan Valley Country Club, was accidentally hit on the head by a swinging midiron in the hands of a fellow-player which stretched him on the field unconscious and bleeding. Dr. Lancelot Ely was summoned and Reed was removed to the clubhouse for first aid, but a swift examination showed such dangerous symptoms that he was taken to the Somerset Hospital.

An operation performed soon after disclosed that Reed's head was crushed above the left ear. He died shortly before 10 o'clock tonight. Reed's wife, who lives at 273 George Street, New Brunswick, and his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Reed, were at the hospital when he died.

Three city officials of New Brunswick, Eugene A. McLaughlin, City Clerk; James V. Harkins of the Water Department and Howard Stahlin of the Street Department, all friends of Reed, came here this morning for a holiday on the course at the club, which has the largest golf course in the State. It was there that President Harding played and was made an honorary member during his visit at the home of ex-Senator Joseph S. Frelinghuysen. Reed, who had been proposed as a member of the club, was the guest of one of his companions, and it was Reed's second practical lesson in the game.

Hit by Backward Swing.

Spectators of the accident said Reed was felled by a blow from Stahlin's iron as he closely followed the movements of the player without realization of any danger from this close proximity. Stahlin was driving the ball at the third green, his final stroke being a hard swing, which, starting for the right shoulder, ended over his left shoulder and crashed on Reed's left temple.

Stahlin said he had not known that Reed was behind him and did not know he had hit Reed. Stahlin went on with his play until he glanced back and saw Reed lying on the ground. Stahlin and Harkins made a report of the accident to George D. Totten, County Detective of Somerset County. They were told that they might return to their homes and would be notified of any further inquiry about the accident.

A member of the Raritan Valley Country Club who had examined into the accident, said last night that Reed and his companions were inexperienced players and that the accident was due to the fact that each of the players had acted as his own caddy.

Players Had No Caddies.

"If they had had caddies this injury, the first of its kind in golf that I have ever heard of, could not have occurred," asserted the club representative. "Reed and Stahlin drove off on the third hole, with Reed's ball about six feet ahead of that of his companion. Reed made his play and then, instead of stepping aside for Stahlin to drive, he moved back and behind Stahlin to pick up his bag. As Reed straightened up with his bag he met the swinging iron, which hit him with terrific force about two inches above his left ear."

Reed, who is about 40 years old, had not had a vacation for several years, and yesterday was the first day of a two weeks' vacation he intended to put in at golf. He is a member of the Republican Club and the Elks of New Brunswick. When his wife and his parents reached his bed at the hospital late last night he had not regained consciousness.

BRYAN WILL TAKE A HAND.

Going to 1924 Convention—Opposes Smith and Underwood.

Special to The New York Times.

OMAHA, Oct. 12.—William J. Bryan is going to attend the Democratic National Convention next year and he intends to have something to say about the naming of the Presidential nominee. He said as much today in Lincoln, where he stopped to see his brother, Governor Charles W. Bryan.

"Politics is in a chaotic condition, with no indication of what may happen," said Mr. Bryan. "The Republican Party is divided and the Democratic Party is worse than divided, at present."

He said Governor "Al" Smith and Senator Underwood were both impossible as Democratic candidates.

"Coolidge has the inside track, but there is no telling what may happen before next Winter," he added.

STRANGLER KILLS WOMAN IN HER ROOM

Victim, Found With Towel Knotted Around Neck, Had Fought for Her Life.

ANOTHER ROOMER MISSING

Police Hunt Man Who Had Said He Was Son of Montreal Clergyman.

Strangled apparently after a maniacal assault, the body of Estelle Phillips, a department store saleswoman, was found in her furnished room at 64 West Ninety-seventh Street, yesterday morning. The police are looking for a man who occupied a room next door to Miss Phillips's on the fourth floor, and who, according to another roomer, stole out of the house shortly after midnight Thursday. He has not been seen since, but detectives of the homicide squad under Captain Arthur Carey are hopeful of finding him soon.

Miss Phillips was 35 years old. For six years she had lived at the Ninety-seventh Street address, where she rented a room from Mr. and Mrs. Richard Barry, lessees of the house. She was employed by Saks & Co., who for fifteen years had known her as a painstaking, faithful worker, with apparently no other interests than her business career. She was employed on a salary and commission basis. Acquaintances said that she had no men friends.

Thursday afternoon she left the store about 5:30 and went directly home. Mrs. Barry told the police that on her way to her room Miss Phillips stepped in to chat with her. Mrs. Barry had been ill and at her request Miss Phillips went to Columbus Avenue to do an errand for her. Later in the evening Miss Phillips met Miss Katherine Mutri, also a roomer on the fourth floor of the Ninety-seventh Street house, and they talked until about 10:30.

Finds Her Friend Dead.

Miss Mutri's room adjoins that of Miss Phillips. Like Miss Phillips, Miss Mutri is also employed in a department store and they were close friends. It had been their custom to go downtown together, so when, at 7 o'clock, Miss Mutri did not hear Miss Phillips stirring about, she went in to wake her up.

What she found sent her rushing horror-stricken from the room. She ran downstairs, where she found Mr. Barry and he notified the police.

The body of Miss Phillips lay across the bed with a towel around the neck. The undergarment which she wore was torn, and her body was scratched and bruised. Nearby lay her leather box purse, opened and empty except for four cents.

Detectives Edward Fitzgerald and James Masterson, who first took charge of the case, notified Police Headquarters, and Captain Arthur Carey of the Homicide Squad went to the house. Soon afterward a representative of Assistant District Attorney Marro of the Homicide Bureau visited the house.

A check-up of the five rooms which, in addition to Miss Phillips's, were on the fourth floor of the house, accounted for all the roomers except one. He was known as Frank Collins, about 28 years old, who had been a roomer there only a week. The absence of this man led to the discovery that his belongings were missing from the room.

Coincident with this discovery, the police, who in the meantime had been questioning witnesses, were getting from Miss Mutri this story:

Saw Collins Leave the House.

After talking with Miss Phillips Thursday night, Miss Mutri went to her room and retired. Soon after midnight she was awakened by some noise, and, listening, she heard some one go down stairs and leave the house. Curious to see who it was, she watched at the window and saw that it was Collins.

Investigation by the police disclosed that Collins up to the preceding afternoon was a cook employed at the Reconstruction Hospital on Central Park West. He had worked there less than a week. Acquaintances at the hospital said that Collins had formerly worked at Ellis Island and that he asserted he was the son of a Montreal clergyman. He also said he had served in the Canadian Army.

The story that he had left the house after midnight the police said was confirmed by another roomer. Collins was said to have carried an old army coat, which he wore almost daily. A search of his room disclosed only a notebook from which some pages had been torn.

The detectives learned that a man answering closely the description of Collins was among those who boarded a train for Montreal at the Grand Central Terminal yesterday morning. The man carried an army coat over his arm and wore a cap described as similar to that which Collins wore. The Montreal police were notified and awaited the arrival of the train in Montreal last night.

Dr. Benjamin Schwartz, Acting Chief Medical Examiner, said that Miss Phillips had been dead since midnight Thursday. He said he believed that the murder was the work of a degenerate and said that the signs indicated that she had struggled with her assailant. An autopsy, performed at Bellevue, confirmed Dr. Schwartz's suspicions, he said later.

The police sent out a general alarm for Collins. He was described as five feet seven inches tall, weight 180 pounds, light complexion and tattoo marks on both arms. He spoke with a slight lisp and was inclined to talks a great deal, his acquaintances said.

Clarence Phillips of 313 Hunts Point Avenue, the Bronx, a brother of the dead woman, was notified. He called at the Ninety-seventh Street house and viewed the body before it was taken to the morgue. He said that since the death of his parents, several years ago, he and his sister and a brother and two other sisters had separated and he had not seen Estelle Phillips since he was married two years ago.

WIDOW ATTACKED, RICH GUEST SHOT, RIVAL IS SUSPECTED

Police Believe That Gunmen Hired by Millionaire Were Mysterious Assailants.

DISCARD ROBBERY THEORY

Woman Describes Strangers Who Seized Her on Lawn of Sound Beach Home.

TWO SHOTS FIRED AT GUEST

Milton M. Maas, Wealthy Chemist, Recovering at Hospital—Love Letters Are Seized.

Burglary was discarded last night by the police of Stamford and Greenwich as the motive that prompted three young men to seize Mrs. Ida M. Leslie as she stepped out on her lawn at Sound Beach, Conn., in the twilight of Thursday evening and then to wound twice Milton M. Maas, wealthy New York chemist, her guest, who ran to her rescue.

An all-day investigation jointly by the police of the Connecticut communities, under the direction of James F. Walsh, Prosecuting Attorney of Fairfield County, substituted a plot to kill for the burglary theory which was advanced by Mrs. Leslie and Maas as the probable motive for the attack.

"The authorities are convinced," said a person in touch with the investigation, "that two New York gunmen were hired by a jealous rival of Mr. Maas to kill him. If robbery had been the motive the men would have taken the jewels Mrs. Leslie was wearing. She had on at least $10,000 worth of jewelry when she was attacked."

That a New York millionaire, known nationally in the business and social world, was a rival of Maas for the affections of Mrs. Leslie became known last night when the police seized a package of love letters at Mrs. Leslie's house. A number of the letters were from the New York man, whose name was withheld. Quotes were copies of Mrs. Leslie's answers to some of his letters.

Indicate a Rival.

The correspondence reveals, according to the Greenwich authorities, that Mrs. Leslie had other male friends, but that Maas's chief rival appeared to have been the unnamed millionaire.

It was learned definitely last night that the Greenwich authorities were working on the theory that the man who shot Maas and his two companions were gunmen hired for the purpose of getting rid of Maas.

When this theory was definitely presented to Mrs. Leslie last night by the authorities, she became indignant and rejected it. She insisted that robbery was the motive of the trio and that they did not seize the diamond ring, bracelet and wrist watch that she wore because they overlooked them.

When Mrs. Leslie was set upon by the men and thrown to the ground roughly, they told her to be quiet, that they did not intend to harm her. She said that they probably thought she was the maid.

Nine Bridgeport residents, many of them professional men, were questioned yesterday by the police about a party held in the Leslie home on Wednesday night. Cocktails were served, according to the police. All of those at the party gave satisfactory explanations to the detectives who visited them yesterday. The party was held at an inn near Sound Beach on Wednesday night, Mrs. Leslie, with the wife of a New York physician, having met Maas at the Sound Beach Station upon the arrival of the 6 o'clock train from New York that night.

In the Stamford City Hospital last night, Mr. Maas, who is Vice President of the Maas & Waldstein Company, manufacturing chemists, at 45 John Street, with a big plant in Newark, was pronounced to be out of danger. One bullet of .38 calibre had sped through his shoulder. The second shot had merely grazed his abdomen. He made a brief statement to the police early in the day and is to be questioned further.

Mystery Is Deepened.

Inquiry by detectives into the circumstances surrounding the attack on Mrs. Leslie, a widow about 45 years old, and the shooting of Maas, deepened rather than dissipated the initial mystery of the affair. Finding of an abandoned Peerless coupe, new and of an expensive model, less than a mile from the Leslie home, gave the police another problem to solve.

Late last night word came from the Boston police that the automobile had been stolen in Winthrop, Mass., at 8 o'clock on Thursday evening. The time of the theft precluded the early theory of the authorities that the machine might be linked in some fashion with the attack on Mrs. Leslie and Maas.

The machine, olive green in color and with special upholstery, was found at 7

Asks Atlantic City Citizens To Help Exterminate Vice

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Oct. 12.—Prosecutor Louis A. Repetto today extended a general invitation to citizens who have knowledge of violations of the liquor and moral laws in this city to visit him. Repetto is conducting the Grand Jury inquiry instituted at the request of Supreme Court Justice Charles C. Black in his charge to the jury on Tuesday.

"I will welcome the visits of any citizens who may have legal knowledge of conditions in this city," said Prosecutor Repetto. "We are desirous of bringing about a radical change here and need the help of citizens generally to accomplish it."

Repetto stated that an invitation would be extended to the five City Commissioners to appear before the Grand Jury in the near future.

LLOYD GEORGE FAILS TO MOVE WASHINGTON

Coolidge Will Take No Notice of Feeler for a British-American Peace Accord.

VISITOR RATED UNOFFICIAL

Former Premier Spends the Day Traveling to Winnipeg—Admires Canada's Scenery.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 12.—Inquiries at the White House today failed to bring any comment on suggestions regarding American international relations contained in the speeches of Mr. Lloyd George in Canada. It was said that President Coolidge could not take notice of statements made by an unofficial visitor.

With particular reference to Mr. Lloyd George's proposal of an Anglo-American entente it was indicated that if such a proposal came formally from any one authorized to speak for the British Government the President would take notice of it, but as Mr. Lloyd George held no office his observations and suggestions could not be noticed in any authoritative way.

There is no likelihood that the entente proposal will bear fruit here. Nothing has taken place to lead to a belief that the strong opposition in the Senate to the agreement for an Anglo-French-American entente to guarantee France against German aggression, brought from Paris by President Wilson in 1919, has changed sufficiently to justify the submission of an entente arrangement with Great Britain. While in his speech on the subject Mr. Lloyd George indicated that there would be no necessity for a written understanding, it is clear that the Washington Administration would not enter into any arrangement with the British Government of the character suggested by Mr. Lloyd George that was not put down in black and white.

Coolidge to Receive Him Oct. 25.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 12 (Associated Press).—Arrangements have been made to have Mr. David Lloyd George during his stay in Washington, Oct. 25 and 26, call on President Coolidge and former President Wilson and visit Arlington Cemetery and Mount Vernon.

Soon after his arrival the former British Premier will go to the White House, where he will be a luncheon guest. Afterward he will go to the S Street home of Mr. Wilson, an hour and a half having been set aside for his visit there and a subsequent call on Chief Justice Taft.

Arriving here on the morning of Oct. 25 Mr. Lloyd George will be met at the Union Station by Butler Wright, Third Assistant Secretary of State, and Henry G. Chilton, Charge d'Affaires of the British Embassy. In the forenoon he is expected to visit Secretary Hughes at the State Department and he will be the guest of honor that night at a dinner given by Secretary and Mrs. Hughes.

The forenoon of the second day will be given over to visits to Arlington and Mount Vernon, after which Mr. Lloyd George will be a luncheon guest of civic and trade organizations and the Southern Society. Later in the day, at his request, he will call on Secretaries Weeks and Denby. He is expected also to meet informally Welsh residents of Washington and Baltimore at his hotel. In the evening he will be a dinner guest of Secretary Mellon.

Accompanied by his wife and daughter and Secretary Weeks, Mr. Lloyd George will go by automobile to Gettysburg, Oct. 27, returning here in the evening to be the dinner guest of the Overseas Writers.

The arrangements for Mr. Lloyd George's stay here have been made under the direction of Secretary Davis. While Mr. Lloyd George is at the Executive Mansion his wife and daughter will be luncheon guests of Mrs. Davis, and they will be received at the White House by Mrs. Coolidge while the for-

Mercantile Marine Seeks U. S. Ships, Including Leviathan, for New Service

P. A. S. Franklin, President of the International Mercantile Marine Company, verified last night a report from Washington that his company was negotiating with the United States Shipping Board for the purchase of several of its passenger and freight steamships to be operated by the Atlantic Transport Company of West Virginia, a subsidiary of the International Mercantile Marine. Mr. Franklin said that he preferred that the details of the offer made by his company should come from the Shipping Board, but that one of the conditions was that the steamships operated by the United States Lines to London and the freighters run on the same route by the Shipping Board be taken off.

It is understood that the negotiations include the Leviathan, George Washington, America and Republic, which would be put on the Southampton service under the Atlantic Transport Line of West Virginia. Mr. Franklin said last night:

"The Atlantic Transport Line of West Virginia owns the Minnekahda, Manchuria, Mongolia, Finland and Kroonland, which have been engaged in the New York and Hamburg service and is a distinct organization from the Atlantic Transport Company of London, which owns the new liner Minnewaska and a number of freighters. Another liner, the Minnetonka, is nearly completed in Belfast and will be placed on the London service with other vessels of the Atlantic Transport Company of West Virginia if the Shipping Board ships are taken off."

Mr. Franklin added that the International Mercantile Marine Company was ready at any time to do its part toward the development of the American merchant marine and would enter into discussions with the United States Shipping Board on the terms and conditions for the purchase of additional tonnage.

FORD'S HAT IN RING, WASHINGTON THINKS; STUDIES HIS ATTACK

His Statement on Muscle Shoals Is Interpreted as Assailing Coolidge Regime.

PRIMARIES ANOTHER SIGN

Announcement in Detroit Also Says He Intends to Return His War Profits.

WEEKS ISSUES A REPLY

Action Follows Cabinet Discussion —Secretary Is Reported Angered by the Attack.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 12.—Political Washington has no doubt that Henry Ford's hat is in the political ring. His attack on John W. Weeks, Secretary of War, for the sale of part of the Muscle Shoals nitrate development, and his action in permitting his name to go on the Nebraska Presidential primary ballot, are regarded as conclusive evidence that the Detroit automobile manufacturer hears the Presidential bee buzzing around his head and likes the sound. Other things which politicians have heard contribute to forming this conclusion.

Mr. Ford did not have to wait long for a response to his attack on Secretary Weeks, printed in this morning's newspapers. Late this afternoon the Secretary of War gave out a formal statement in which he charged that Mr. Ford's attack "is filled with reckless assertions." He reviewed the sale of the Gorgas plant, a portion of the Muscle Shoals project, to the Alabama Power Company, and justified its end ended with this significant remark:

"I do not propose to continue a newspaper discussion of this subject, but if necessary shall place all facts before a proper tribunal."

The handing of Secretary Weeks's response to Mr. Ford followed a discussion at the Cabinet of the attack on Mr. Weeks made by Mr. Ford. Later in the day, prior to giving out his statement to the newspapers, Secretary Weeks had a long talk with President Coolidge. There was some delay in issuing the statement after it was agreed that it would be furnished to the press, and the explanation made by a War Department official was that "the Secretary is waiting until he cools off."

It was evident that Mr. Weeks was angry over the attack made on him by Mr. Ford. At the War Department it was indicated that the Secretary's statement would have been much more severe on Mr. Ford if Mr. Weeks felt that he could have made it as an individual and not as Secretary of War.

Ford Wouldn't Oppose Harding.

Incident to the Ford-Weeks controversy, it is disclosed that Mr. Ford had indicated that he would not be a candidate for President if Mr. Harding were renominated. There is evidence that President Harding so believed, and the understanding among close friends of the late President was that Mr. Ford had given personal assurance to that effect to Mr. Harding.

That Mr. Harding and Mr. Ford were on rather friendly terms was accepted by those who were aware of the several meetings that took place between them. At the funeral of President Harding Mr. Ford and his wife were among the limited number of unofficial spectators invited by Mrs. Harding to witness the entombment of the President in Marion cemetery. Mr. and Mrs. Ford had accommodations near the door of the tomb, in a small space assigned to General Pershing and members of the Senate.

While Mr. Ford's attitude toward the mention of his name for the Presidential nomination has been something of a mystery, politicians have claimed to know of great activities in a political way on the part of persons regarded as friends of Mr. Ford. Circumstantial stories have been told of arrangements to create Ford Presidential sentiment in this or that State, and those who have credited these stories are not surprised over the action of Mr. Liebold, general secretary of Mr. Ford, in writing a letter to Secretary of State Pool of Nebraska, which made no objection to having Mr. Ford's name placed on the Presidential primary ballot of the Nebraska Progressive Party. In this connection it is considered of possible significance that Secretary Pool was a caller at the White House today. His name did not appear on the list of those having appointments with President Coolidge.

When President Harding was in the Far West on his way to Alaska last Summer members of his party found much Ford-for-President sentiment, particularly among farmers. One Republican Senator told some of them that if Ford were nominated for President, even on a third party ticket, he would sweep the West. Another Republican Senator said that Ford-for-President sentiment was rampant in his State.

It is generally agreed by politicians, however, that Ford has no prospect of obtaining the nomination of either of the major political parties.

According to reports reaching Washington, Mr. Ford has been very angry over the action of Secretary Weeks in selling the Gorgas plant to the Alabama Power Company. At the time of the sale President Coolidge justified it to those who asked for information, and contended that it was not necessary to carry out Mr. Ford's plan for the construction of the Muscle Shoals nitrate project.

The belief prevailed in Washington today that in his statement attacking Secretary Weeks, Mr. Ford was using President Coolidge as much as he was his Secretary of War. There is a general feeling in political circles here that the statement of Mr. Ford is the beginning of a spirited political battle which will attain its greatest vigor in the campaign of 1924, with preceding skirmishes when Congress assembles in December.

Secretary Weeks's Statement.

The statement issued by Secretary Weeks reads:

"Mr. Ford this morning delivered a personal attack upon me in connection with the conduct of the Administration in relation to Muscle Shoals. His statement is filled with reckless assertions.

"It may be that Mr. Ford, relying as he does upon other persons in the conduct of so many enterprises, probably is not himself possessed of the full facts of the situation. For the benefit of those who do not fully understand the problems involved I shall briefly review the subject.

"Muscle Shoals was a development for nitrate purposes in the war, which included the construction of a large dam on the Tennessee River and the construction of two air-fixing nitrate plants, with large quarries, and as an adjunct to these plants, in order to supply power pending the completion of the water power dam, a steam plant was erected ninety miles away on the Warrior River, known as the Gorgas plant.

"The total expenditure on these properties was about $102,000,000, of which less than $5,000,000 was spent upon this isolated and temporary steam plant. The steam plant was built on the property of the Alabama Power Company, which reserved title to the land on agreed conditions with the Wilson Administration, for which this Administration is not responsible, and which gave to them the right to purchase the Gorgas steam plant.

"The proposals made by Mr. Ford for the purchase of this entire equipment involved the payment by him of $5,000,000 for the entire plant, including the above isolated and temporary steam plant. They also involved many other conditions with regard to the completion of the water power, &c. No disposal of Government property can rightfully be made by any administrative officers without the approval of Congress, and I, as the responsible official in this matter, referred Mr. Ford's offer to Congress, which has so far not acted upon it.

"In the meantime the Alabama Power Company, under its rights in the old contract, notified the Government that the lands must be vacated on or before Oct. 15 this year. They offered to pay $5,500,000 for this comparatively small item of the whole equipment. The Government had an option to accept this offer, which was the highest made, or to salvage this plant as second-hand machinery, and from which they could not have realized more than $1,000,000. On the other hand, it must be borne in mind that for this single item in the entire equipment the Government has secured $2,500,000, as against the $5,000,000 offered by Mr. Ford for the entire plant and equipment.

"At the time of the sale, in a desire not to disturb the status quo, the Administration stated to Mr. Ford that this amount could be credited on his original offer of $5,000,000 if it was so wished.

"Mr. Ford's declared purpose in purchasing the Muscle Shoals is the manufacture of nitrates for fertilization purposes. I have the keenest interest in the development of air fixation of nitrates in assistance of the American farmer and in the adaptability of Muscle Shoals for this purpose.

"As evidence of the Government's desire to promote this end, it is carrying forward today the construction of hydraulic works on the Tennessee River, with a view to making that great water power available for the purpose. I have never opposed Mr. Ford's securing the use of this water power or any other equipment we have, provided he is able to give such assurance of its being devoted to this particular purpose as will satisfy Congress and properly protect the public interest. That he could ever economically make nitrates by the use of steam power is denied by every expert adviser.

"The fact that he says his offer is still open would seem to indicate that he does not regard the Gorgas steam plant as necessary to him in the carrying out of his plan to purchase and develop Muscle Shoals water power. I do not propose to continue a newspaper discussion of this subject, but if necessary shall place all facts before a proper tribunal."

Weeks Angered by Attack.

The Secretary's statement, which was issued after he had two long conferences with President Coolidge, is much milder than had been expected. For the most part it confines itself to a statement of the "facts in the case," with a review of the incidents leading up to the sale of the Gorgas plant.

But there was no doubt that Secretary Weeks was highly incensed at the personal nature of the attack by Mr. Ford and those close to the Secretary intimated that his reply would have been much more vigorous but for his official position. The interpretation placed apparently by both President Coolidge and Secretary Weeks upon the Ford attack was, that despite the charges against Secretary Weeks personally, the statement was in reality an attempt to discredit the whole Republican Administration.

The sale of the Gorgas plant, it was recalled, was entirely endorsed by President Coolidge at the time the sale was consummated. At that time the White House spokesman said that President Coolidge did not regard the transfer of the plant to the Alabama Power Company as in any way interfering with the Ford project for taking over Muscle Shoals for the manufacture of nitrates. The White House spokesman also pointed out that the Government had "no option" in the matter, there being a definite cash offer from the power company, which under the terms of its contract could either purchase the plant or compel its removal by the Government.

In consultation the White House spokesman said that President Coolidge believed, the Gorgas plant had no more connection with the Muscle Shoals proposition "than the stem of an apple has with the apple after it has been pulled from the tree."

MAY RETURN WAR PROFITS.

Ford Books Audited for This Purpose—May Reach $30,000,000.

Special to The New York Times.

DETROIT, Mich., Oct. 12.—E. G. Liebold, secretary to Henry Ford, stated today that the books of the Ford Motor Company are being audited in order that Mr. Ford may turn back to the Government the amount of war profits represented by his stock holdings solely.

Mr. Liebold's statement read:

"Following Mr. Ford's previous announcement that he would turn back to the Government the amount of profits accruing from war work on his own stock holdings in the Ford enterprises, an audit was begun on the books. In fact, there has been more or less continual auditing of the books ever since the close of the war. If we ever get a final settlement on war contracts, taxes and the like, then Ford will make immediate repayment of his profits."

Mr. Liebold would not say when the audit might end or what the amount of the profits to be returned might be.

Mr. Liebold would not hazard a guess as to the amount that would be returned to the Government. It has been estimated at $20,000,000 to $30,000,000.

FORD WITHHOLDS DECISION.

He Will Not Say He Is Not a Candidate.

DETROIT, Oct. 12.—Henry Ford does not wish to make a definite answer at present as to whether or not he will be a candidate for President, E. G. Liebold, his personal secretary, said today in commenting on the news from Nebraska that the Detroit manufacturers' name will go the ballot in the Presidential primary election in that State.

"Various interests throughout the country are making a constant effort to have Mr. Ford answer the question, 'Will you be a candidate for President?' Mr. Liebold said. "Mr. Ford does not wish to answer this question at the present time either with a 'yes' or with a 'no.' He is not a potential candidate in the general sense, but he is not saying he will not be a candidate.

"He does, however, feel that if certain citizens of Nebraska wish to circulate petitions bearing his name they have a right to do so. The fact that he has not withdrawn his name does not mean that he approves or disapproves of the activity in his behalf by the progressive leaders in Omaha."

"This," Mr. Liebold said, "is the policy today. What it will be tomorrow or the next day I cannot say."

MRS. STOKES GOES TO MISSOURI TOWN

Seeks to Refute Charge That She Had Been in Boonville With Wallace.

PECORA TO PRODUCE NOTES

Will Attack Allegation of Star-Chamber Methods Made by Negro Janitor.

Mrs. W. E. D. Stokes left New York yesterday for Bunceton and Boonville, Mo., where she will seek to refute at hearings the testimony of Alice T. Mills and Catherine Kramer, who said that she had been there while a girl with Edgar T. Wallace, named by Stokes as corespondent. Members of the Wallace family will be examined by Roy D. Williams, a Boonville attorney.

According to an Associated Press dispatch from Boonville yesterday, Wilbur Wallace declared that he never had seen Mrs. Stokes or Clarence McCormick. It was alleged that Mrs. Stokes, before her marriage, visited Boonville with Edgar T. Wallace and Clarence McCormick in 1904.

Affidavits were filed yesterday with Supreme Court Justice Robert E. Wagner that Stokes had visited the home of the Wallaces, posing as a writer of history, and that he was ordered out of the house. Other affidavits were filed to the effect that Paul G. Waggoner, as an agents for Stokes, practised bribery and deception on negroes and others in securing evidence in Missouri.

Assistant District Attorney Pecora, it was announced yesterday, is ready with stenographic notes to attack the testimony of Joseph A. Thornton, negro janitor at Wallace's New York apartment. Thornton said that Pecora tried to make him qualify his identification of Mrs. Stokes.

STOKES WITNESS'S LETTERS

Said to Aid Chicago Charge of Conspiracy Against Wife.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Oct. 12.—Assistant State's Attorney Charles S. Wharton, whose local investigations resulted in the indictment of W. E. D. Stokes on the charge of conspiracy to besmirch his wife's name, today said he had additional evidence against Stokes in a bundle of letters written by Nell Rose Miller, witness against Mrs. Stokes at the present divorce trial. The letters were in the possession of her mother, Mrs. Eliza Bailey, 758 East Forty-first Street, and refer to assistance of the American farmer and in the adaptability of Muscle Shoals for this purpose.

"As evidence of the Government's desire to promote this end, it is carrying forward today the construction of hydraulic works on the Tennessee River, with a view to making that great water power available for the purpose. 4 LEAP OFF PLANES IN PARACHUTE RACE

In Contest at Mitchel Field They Shoot Close to Earth Before Opening.

MITCHEL FIELD, L. I., Oct. 12.—The first airplane-parachute jumping contest in this country, in which four contestants participated, was held here this afternoon in the presence of about 1,000 spectators. The four men leaped from moving airplanes at a height of 4,500 feet and landed within 400 feet of each other on the field, less than a minute and a half apart.

At a given signal the men, two of whom were on a De Havilland and the other two on a Curtiss Martin bomber, "stepped" into the air. The men shot downward swiftly, none of them opening his parachute until apparently dangerously close to the ground. Then the speed was checked and the four landed gracefully on the field.

The man who won by landing first was Staff Sergeant Theodore Schleuming of 1,120 East Thirty-eighth Street, Brooklyn. The others in the contest were First Lieutenant Newton Long, fellow; Sergeant Rastle Boss and Staff Sergeant John Meeks.

Lieutenant Edwin Johnson, who made a second unsuccessful attempt to land in a "baby" Sperry messenger plane on Riverside Drive, Manhattan, at noon today, piloted the Martin bomber. He returned to the field this afternoon in the messenger plane, after having been balked by a "tail wind" on the Drive. He will try again to do the "stunt" near Grant's Tomb some day next week, he says.

Darkness Thursday night halted the plans of army mechanics to hasten to New York, repair the machine and fly it to Mitchel Field as was reported yesterday morning.

Again Flies Over Drive.

Undismayed by his mishap of Thursday, when he demolished the wings of his plane while attempting the first airplane landing in a New York street, Lieutenant Edwin Johnson, U. S. A., hopped off yesterday afternoon before a large crowd at Riverside Drive and 125th Street, and gracefully flew back to Mineola. In his effort to land in his tiny Sperry-Messenger plane Thursday afternoon, Lieutenant Johnson struck a lamp-post.

DEFENDS DUTCH NAVY BILL.

Minister Tells Parliament That Indies Must Be Protected.

Copyright, 1923, by The New York Times Company.
Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

THE HAGUE, Oct. 12.—Although the new navy bill did not come before the second Chamber of Parliament today as had been expected, the Social Democratic leader made interpellations regarding the bill and the resulting Government situation.

The Minister of the Interior stated that it was evident from the whole policy of the Government that it realized Holland's obligation in the Far East and that in view of the economic depression sacrifices must be made to fulfil that duty. In reply to a question regarding pressure from abroad, the Minister denied that there was any, saying that Holland's foreign policy was based on her independence, and that she was merely fulfilling her international obligations. The Netherlands, he said, had friendly relations with other powers and had no aggressive intentions, but the strategically involved position in the East Indies must be borne in mind.

The Washington Conference relieved the tension in the East, said the Minister, but the pledges received in Washington did not prevent the Government from doing its duty.

FORD KEEPS A PROMISE.

Takes New Automobile to Old Violinist Who Pleased Him.

BIG RAPIDS, Mich., Oct. 12.—Henry Ford came back to Mecosta County today to make good the promise made during his recent vacation trip with Thomas Edison and Harvey Firestone. He brought to "Jep" Bisbee, old-time violinist, a new automobile.

With the help of Mr. Ford's chauffeur the two spent a busy day making a platform with which to get the machine into the Bisbee barn at Paris, near here. The manufacturer also arranged with a Big Rapids garage man to teach "Jep" how to drive the machine.

Bisbee's old-fashioned dance tunes made a strong appeal to Ford and Edison during the vacation trip and Mr. Edison has promised to send him East to record some of his selections on phonograph records.

SAVANNAH PROTESTS ON OGLETHORPE'S BODY

Mayor and Aldermen Tell English Rector They Object to Bringing It Here.

SAVANNAH, Ga., Oct. 12.—The city of Savannah has sent formal protest by cable to the Rev. Leslie Wright, rector of the church in Cranham, Essex, London, where Oglethorpe is buried, against the removal of the body of the founder of Georgia for transference to this State. The Mayor's cablegram reads:

"Mayor and Aldermen of Savannah, in council assembled, adopted resolutions protesting against disinterment and removal of remains of Oglethorpe, founder of the colony of Georgia, and city of Savannah. Please consider this an official protest from the municipal government of this city and give this due publicity."

WASHINGTON, Oct. 12.—Opposition to the removal from England of the body of General Oglethorpe will not affect the attitude of this Government, Representative Upshaw of Georgia said, after a conference today with officials of the State Department. The Society of Colonial Wars of Savannah has protested against the disinterment.

Mr. Upshaw telegraphed to Governor Walker of Georgia that a telegram to the State Department, transmitting the Savannah protest, could not be considered an official request, "voicing the will of the people of Georgia," and that it came too late to warrant this Government taking action.

The State Department, Mr. Upshaw said, had suggested that a suitable memorial tablet be placed in the English church, where the body was found, and he said this would be done.

"This action of the State Department will result in the body of General Oglethorpe being taken from a grave of local obscurity which it required weeks to find," Mr. Upshaw said, "and in placing it in a patriotic shrine of conspicuous immortality. Arrangements will now be completed for the transfer of the remains to this country."

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Oct. 12.—Application has been made to the Chancellor of the Diocese of Chelmsford to exhume and remove the bodies of General Oglethorpe and his wife to America. The whole position was placed before a well attended meeting of the church council by the rector and the decision to take a further step was arrived at unanimously. A notification will be issued and this will be posted on the church door on Sunday, remaining there for the statutory eight days to allow of opposition being entered.

The opposition, led by the parish council and labor council, is growing, but it is believed locally to be unlikely to result in any legal steps to oppose on the ground of expense.

The Morning Post asks what reason has been shown for the proposed conveyance of Oglethorpe's remains to the United States. It says:

"James Edward Oglethorpe was an English soldier. He raised an English regiment. He was a member of the House of Commons, a well-known figure in the life of London and a friend of such Englishmen as Johnson, Goldsmith and Burke. Pope wrote that 'one driven by strong benevolence of soul shall fly like Oglethorpe from polo to pole,' and though he did indeed fly as far afield as the American colonies and there founded the State of Georgia, he was in the first place an English country gentleman who, when he was not employed in his country's service abroad, lived for thirty-five years in the manor house of Cranham.

"Surely, then, in the nature of things Englishmen should need a very good and sufficient reason before they allow his grave to be disturbed. We are proud that a son of England should deserve such honors as are suggested by the people of the State of Georgia, which he founded but his fame is surely more reason why England should cherish him."

HOLD 4 FOR MURDERS LAID TO POISON LIQUOR

Pana (Ill.) Jury Accuse Soft Drink Dispenser, Himself Dying With Son.

PANA, Ill., Oct. 12.—John Tokoly, proprietor of a soft drink parlor, his two sons, Paul and Stephen, and Robert A. Smith, a chemist, tonight were ordered held without bond on charges of murder by a Coroner's jury which investigated the deaths of five men here yesterday. The jury returned a verdict that the men died as a result of drinking fusel oil in beverage sold to them by John Tokoly.

Tokoly himself with his son, Stephen, is under arrest at a hospital where they are suffering from the effects of drinking the beverage. Paul has not been apprehended and Smith left the city this afternoon. Telegrams have been sent to surrounding towns requesting his arrest.

The Coroner's jury heard twenty-five witnesses, including prominent business men of Pana. John Tokoly, who was one of the witnesses, when examined by State's Attorney Dowell that Smith concocted the alcohol used in the liquor. He collapsed on the witness stand and was taken to the hospital, where physicians said little hope was held for his recovery.

A number of relatives of the dead men appeared before the jury. Mrs. Kenneth Baldwin said her husband told her in a dying statement that he bought the whisky in Tokoly's place.

The October Grand Jury was ordered to reassemble next Monday to investigate the deaths.

Three more men were taken to the hospital today suffering from the effects of the poisonous liquor, bringing to six the number of persons who are in a critical condition. Doctors hold out little hope for their recovery.

RUMORS THAT CANADA MAY BE A KINGDOM

London Daily Sketch Reports Speculation That Prince of Wales May Live There.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Oct. 12.—The Daily Sketch says that "curious rumors are in circulation about the Prince of Wales and Canada. His Royal Highness is known to be very much attached to that country, and he showed in his leave-taking how much he regretted that his visit had come to an end. He remarked, however, that he would soon return and prolong his visit as much as possible.

"This has given rise to much speculation as to whether a change in the constitution is in contemplation. There are those who seem to foresee great developments within the empire at no great distance of time, and one of them is the raising of Canada from the status of a Dominion to that of a Kingdom."

The Prince was riding back from the Montreal hunt after a good day's sport when he visited the schoolhouse "to look the pupils over." The teacher introduced him to the pupils as their future sovereign. The youngsters, all French, sang "God Save the King" and got a day's holiday.

BELFAST LINEN MAN KILLED IN AUTO HERE

Woman's Skull Fractured, Her Son and a Friend Also Hurt.

SPEEDING ON PARKWAY

Car Overturned and Four Occupants Hurled to the Road Near Central Islip.

Special to The New York Times.

BRENTWOOD, L. I., Oct. 12.—John Strang, linen manufacturer of Belfast, Ireland, whose firm has offices in New York City, was instantly killed this afternoon when the automobile in which he and three others were riding at a high rate of speed three miles east of Central Islip was wrecked on the Long Island Motor Parkway.

Three other occupants of the automobile, John Hodgson, of Flushing, Queens, his mother and R. W. Charlesson, also of Belfast were injured and were removed to Ross Hospital at Brentwood.

Coroner Moore, said there was evidence that when Hodgson drove down a steep hill on the parkway he misjudged a sharp curve at the base and the machine, getting out of his control, raced to a gully on the side and turned over. All the occupants were thrown out as the car overturned.

Strang, a member of the manufacturing firm of McCromb, Watson & Mercer, with offices at 15 White Street, New York City, received a fracture of the skull from which he died before the arrival of Dr. P. H. Williams from Ross's Hospital and Dr. E. M. McCoy of Brentwood. When the three injured persons reached the hospital Dr. H. E. Chauvin of Brentwood was called in as a consultant.

It was reported that Strang and Charlesson arrived in this country several days ago from Belfast on a business trip. Charlesson, it was said, was an official of Ross Brothers, Inc., another linen firm in Ireland, with offices at 112 Franklin Street in this city. Hodgson, an old friend of the men, was said to have invited them on Thursday for a motor trip down Long Island.

Mr. Hodgson, who is connected with the brokerage firm of Logan & Bryan in the financial district was said to have called for the two visiting merchants at their hotel in New York in the forenoon, after which the three men motored in Hodgson's car to the home of Hodgson's mother in Manhattan.

The party then rode across the Queensboro Bridge to Long Island, and were speeding through the Motor Parkway near Central Islip at about 1 o'clock in the afternoon, when the accident happened.

The four occupants, it was reported, lay unconscious on the road for about ten minutes before other motorists appeared and discovered Strang in dying condition. Dr. Williams was requested to hurry to the scene of the accident in an ambulance, and on the way picked up Dr. McCoy.

Charlesson was found to be suffering from internal injuries, a fracture of the collar bone and cuts and bruises about the head and body. Hodgson's back and head were severely gashed by fragments of glass and he also sustained internal injuries. The condition of his mother was considered the most serious.

Dr. Williams said that it was believed that she had suffered a fracture of the skull and internal injuries.

Walter Reid, 8 years old, of 429 Lincoln Road, was run over and killed yesterday by an automobile in front of 121 Clarkson Avenue, Brooklyn. The car was being operated by Robert Payes of 314 Bainbridge Street, Brooklyn. Witnesses told the police that the boy ran in front of the car. Payes was not arrested.

John Sadler, 15 years old, of 331 Seventeenth Street, while roller skating at Sixth Avenue and Seventeenth Street, Brooklyn, fell beneath a rear wheel of a motor truck and was killed. The driver of the vehicle, Philip Reichin of 235 Suydam Street, was held blameless.

Trackwalker Killed on Subway.

o'clock yesterday morning at the base of a steep incline leading to the Havemeyer estate in Sound Beach. The engine was in good shape and there seemed to be no reason for the car having been abandoned. The police found a golf bag, a pair of white flannel trousers and a gray silk cap in the machine.

According to the stories told to the police of Greenwich and of Stamford by Mrs. Leslie, fifteen years a tenant of one of Sound Beach's most pretentious homes, and by Maas, a bachelor, 52 years old, with apartments in the Hotel Ansonia and a fine home at Asbury Park, N. J., the chemist called on his widow friend on Thursday night.

Maas, whose friendship with Mrs. Leslie goes back more than twenty years, visited at the Leslie home in Ledge Road, Sound Beach, some times as often as thrice a week. After dinner on Thursday night Mrs. Leslie went out with her two Pekinese. She told the police that as she stepped out on the lawn three young men seized her and threw her down. Her scream brought Mr. Maas running to the porch. Mrs. Leslie's story, supported in its essentials by Mr. Maas, was that one of the men, without a word, ran over and fired twice at the chemist. The trio then fled.

Mrs. Leslie said that she managed to regain her home and notified Dr. A. Robinson, a physician who lives two doors away. He ordered Mr. Maas taken to the City Hospital in Stamford. Mrs. Leslie then notified Captain Patrick J. Flannaran of the Greenwich Police, who in turn got into communication with Judge Walsh. The latter reached the Leslie home with his assistant, Henry B. White, about the time the police got there.

Mrs. Leslie's Statement.

Mrs. Leslie made the following statement to Judge Walsh:

"Mr. Maas and I had finished dinner. My little dogs were eager for a run, and leaving Mr. Maas in the living room, I took them out. I had started for a walk on the beach and as I reached the porch three men sprang from the shrubbery, grabbed me by the throat and threw me down. I struggled and screamed and Mr. Maas came rushing out.

"One of the men said to me, 'Don't scream, we don't want to hurt you at all.'

"Just as Mr. Maas reached the porch one of the three men let go of me and ran toward him. The man fired twice and Mr. Maas collapsed. I almost fainted. I have no idea what the motive of the men could have been unless it was robbery, yet they took nothing from either of us. So far as I know, Mr. Maas had no enemies. Robbery seems to be the only possible motive for the attack.

"The men all seemed to be very nervous. They seemed to be novices. The man who fired fumbled for some time in getting his gun out of his pocket and the other two seemed very nervous. They disappeared down the road after getting into a waiting touring car. That is all that I can tell you."

After this preliminary statement from Mrs. Leslie the Prosecutor directed Captain Flannagan to make a thorough search of the house and grounds. The house, a two-story stucco affair, is on four acres of well kept grounds. It is less than fifty feet from the Sound shore and is surrounded by substantially situated estates set far back in spacious tracts. Captain Flannagan reported finding the imprint of three pairs of feet in the shrubbery, a large hedge to the left of the porch and also footprints back of the bushes as though the intruders described by Mrs. Leslie had waited there for some time.

Pistol Found in House.

In the house the detectives found a .38-calibre Smith & Wesson pistol. The weapon was of an old-fashioned type and the chamber was empty. It had apparently not been used for some time. The police were informed that the gun had been kept in the house merely as a protection. It was explained that Mrs. Leslie, although she maintained an apartment at 31 West Fifty-eighth Street, Manhattan, and was a regular Winter visitor to the Florida East Coast spent most of her time in the Sound Beach home.

On the porch the policemen picked up a leaden bullet. The missile was badly smashed. Inside the house, in the hall, the police found the second piece of lead. Mr. Maas, when shot the second time, half spun around but kept to his feet. He managed to walk back into the house and the police thought as he did so the bullet that grazed his abdomen dropped to the grass carpeting.

Dispatching Captain Flannagan to the Stamford City Hospital to wait until Maas regained consciousness and could be questioned, Judge Walsh asked Mrs. Leslie and her maid, Miss Wilhelmina Slobie, the only other occupant of the house, to accompany him to his office. This was at 3 o'clock, and it was understood that the Prosecutor questioned the maid and her mistress until 2 o'clock in the morning.

What was gleaned in this examination could not be ascertained from Judge Walsh. It was said, however, that Mrs. Leslie and another Sound Beach woman whose name was not obtained, had gone together to Weishoff's roadhouse, near Sound Beach, on Wednesday evening. There it was said, the two women became acquainted with two parties of motorists who were dining there. In the group were four men said to be residents of Bridgeport. It was reported that the party set out after dinner for the Leslie home in one automobile, bearing several of the party, got lost on the way.

It was said, however, that the four Bridgeport men in a second machine got to the Leslie home and that they were entertained there by Maas and Mrs. Leslie. The maid is said to have told this to the prosecutor. The visitors are said to have reached the Leslie home at about 11 o'clock on Wednesday night.

Two of Assailants Described.

Judge Walsh obtained from Mrs. Leslie descriptions of two of her assailants. The man who shot Maas, she said, was rather tall, wore a light overcoat and a cap. One of the two strangers who held up and shot Maas had light hair and wore a tan topcoat with a black soft hat. All of the men, she added, kept their headgear well pulled down so that it was impossible for her to catch an adequate glimpse of their features.

After the questioning, Mrs. Leslie returned to her home where she detained herself to all callers. Gustave Fleischman, nephew of Maas, a flour broker on the Produce Exchange, was summoned from his home in Asbury Park and went to Sound Beach. He repeated the story set forth substantially the story told to Judge Walsh by Mrs. Leslie. He explained that Mrs. Leslie could not be disturbed, although a loud speaking radio was broadcasting through the open windows the results of the world's series game at the Yankee Stadium. Mrs. Leslie remained in seclusion last night and reporters were told that she was in a highly nervous condition and under the care of a New York physician. This physician refused to give his name.

Mr. Fleischman denied that Mrs. Leslie, whom he characterized as an old friend of his family, had ever been on the stage. The report that she had been an actress at one time seemingly sprung out of the statements of Sound Beach residents that Mrs. Leslie often entertained stage celebrities and that Geraldine Farrar, operatic star, had called at the Leslie home on at least one occasion.

Mrs. Leslie, according to Fleischman, had been a widow since 1900 and Mr. Maas had known her for years. Fleischman said that her husband had been a volunteer in the Spanish-American War and during the campaign had contracted an ailment which caused his death several years later.

"It has been reported, I understand," said Mr. Fleischman, "that my uncle and Mrs. Leslie were engaged. That is not true. They were merely friends. Mrs. Leslie is well-to-do."

The police sent an alarm throughout Connecticut for the three men mentioned by Maas and Mrs. Leslie.

Robbery Theory.

Regarding the attempted robbery theory, the police pointed out that no effort had been male to get any loot. When she was attacked Mrs. Leslie was wearing a diamond ring, a diamond studded platinum bracelet and a platinum wrist watch set with gems. Mr. Maas had considerable money in his pockets. In addition, the police said, even unskilled burglars would not risk stationing themselves on anybody's lawn so early in the evening.

When Mr. Fleischman was asked if his uncle had any enemies, he said "No, not even bad friends."

At Asbury Park other relatives of Mr. Maas added their denials to that of Mr. Fleischman of the report of an engagement between Maas and Mrs. Leslie.

"My brother has known Mrs. Leslie for at least thirty years," said Mrs. Emil Fleischman of 1,608 Park Avenue, Manhattan, a sister of the wounded man. "He visited her often, but if any engagement existed none of us knew of it."

Mr. Maas's mother, seriously ill at her home, 191 Ballentine Parkway, Asbury Park, was not told of her son's injuries.

TELLS OF FINANCING OF HULTON'S PAPERS

Daily Mail Trust Will Issue £8,000,000 Debentures in Carrying Out Purchase.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Oct. 12.—Financial details of the sale of Sir Edward Hulton's newspaper interests to Lords Rothermere and Beaverbrook are now published. It is announced that the Daily Mail Trust, which was formed in September last year to acquire 400,000 deferred shares in Associated Newspapers, Limited, for £1,000,000 in cash, has purchased the whole business of Sir Edward Hulton & Co., for £8,000,000, except the Evening Standard, in which it will hold only 40 per cent. interest, Lord Beaverbrook having acquired the balance of 51 per cent.

The purchase will involve an exceptionally large financial operation. At the start of its operations the trust had a capital of £1,000,000 in ordinary shares of £1 each, on which two shillings had been paid. This has since been increased. In addition, it has £1,600,000 of 7 per cent. guaranteed fifteen-year first mortgage debenture stock, which was sold to the public thirteen months ago at 90 per cent.

The Daily Mail Trust now holds 800,000 Associated Newspaper shares and other investments. In addition to the assets newly acquired it proposes an issue of £8,000,000 of 7 per cent. debentures at 99. These will be secured an assets referred to above and on uncalled capital of the trust, which is now £1,600,000, and will be guaranteed by Daily Mirror Newspapers, Limited, and Sunday Pictorial Newspapers, Limited. The debentures will be redeemable by a 2 per cent. sinking fund to begin at once. The redemption price of debentures will be 105 during the first three years and 107 thereafter. Earnings of the trust will show that the service of the debentures is covered more than three times.

Out of the proceeds of the issue outstanding debentures in trust will be redeemed and holders will have the right to allotment of the new issue on advantageous terms. Issue will be made by the British Colonial and Foreign Corporation at the end of next week.

The newspapers which now pass under control of Lord Rothermere include The London Daily Sketch, Illustrated Sunday Herald, Manchester Daily Dispatch, Manchester Evening Chronicle, Manchester Sunday Chronicle and The Empire News.

PLEADS TO BALDWIN FOR GUARANTEE TREATY

Murray Gets a Promise of Consideration of Plan to Expedite Its Ratification.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Oct. 12.—In a letter to the Prime Minister Professor Gilbert Murray, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the League of Nations Union, refers to Mr. Baldwin's statement to the Imperial Conference that the Government "would gladly co-operate with other Governments in limiting the strength of air armaments" and points out that a few days ago the proposed treaty of mutual guarantees was adopted by the fourth Assembly of the League for submission to the respective Governments.

"If it is left to the inevitably slow process of approval and ratification by separate Governments," Professor Murray continues, "it may be many years before any effect can be given to its provisions. We therefore urge his Majesty's Government to use all its influence to assemble at the earliest possible date a conference of plenipotentiaries for the purpose of considering how to give effect to the guarantee treaty and so secure reduction, not only of air forces, but of all other armaments as well."

The reply sent on behalf of the Prime Minister says that the views of the Executive Committee of the League of Nations Union in regard to the proposed treaty of mutual guarantees shall have his consideration."

TARAFA BILL TERMS UPHELD BY ZAYAS

Cuban President, in Message to Americans, Denies Confiscation Is Intended.

CAN BUILD PRIVATE ROADS

Asserts Pending Measure Will Not Give Sugar-Handling Monopol to Consolidated Railways.

American sugar companies having interests in Cuba have been assured by President Zayas in a letter that the effect of the Tarafa railroad bill, now pending in the island Congress, would not be as adverse to them as has been stated, according to information received yesterday by the E. N. Robalna and Associated News Service.

The letter was written as a reply to representations made to President Zayas by agents of American companies who contended that the bill denied to sugar companies whose lands in the provinces of Camaguey and Oriente adjoin a public service railway the right to construct private railways on their own lines to an authorized or public port.

"This is not what the bill provides," President Zeyas wrote. "It prohibits the conversion of a private railway into a public service railway in the municipal district in which the consolidated railways may be giving service, and could not prohibit and does not prohibit the construction of a private railway in private lands, but traffic over that private railway to an authorized port. Nevertheless it excepts those already constructed and heretofore in use, and also those which may be constructed in the future, so long as the industry which uses it is not connected with a consolidated public railway or so long as there is no public service railway in the port."

President Zayas denied that the bill prohibited railroads which did not join in the railroad consolidation from building new lines but said it gave to the consolidated company a preferential right for such construction.

"It is alleged," he continued, "that the bill will permit a monopoly of the business of warehousing and handling of sugar and other merchandise in favor of the public service railways and will destroy the rights of sugar companies and private warehouses in ports authorized for foreign commerce.

"To understand it so, is to incur error, since what the bill prohibits, and it is natural that it should, is exportation and importation through any place whatever on the coast other than (a) through the Custom House and its wharves and warehouses; (b) through the terminals of the public service railways now established or which may be established; (c) through the wharves and embarkation points situated in the ports already connected with a public service railway or which may be established within the exceptions provided for in article VIII. of the bill; (d) through the wharves and embarkation points authorized in the chief port (Havana); (e) through the port of Santiago de Cuba and the plants established for the importation of petroleum; (f) through the subports to which Article XI. of the bill refers; (g) through the port of Manati upon the previous fulfillment of a certain condition."

President Zayas denied that the bill infringed to the point of confiscation on the rights acquired by the sugar companies and other persons to load and unload their sugar and other products at existing ports and embarkation points. He declared that all permits given by the Government were revocable, but explained that he did not mean by this that the Government had any intention of revoking them.

"It is a fact," he continued, "that there may occur the case of the use of a subport or embarkation point not being exclusively for the products of a sugar mill or other industry other than the mill or industry for which it was granted, even though belonging to the same owner. It is fitting that this should be so, because, if not, a concession granted for special circumstances might be extended without the existance of such determining circumstances, and some inter

DOMINIONS PLEDGE SUPPORT TO LEAGUE

After Hearing Details of Italo-Greek Crisis, They Back British Action at Geneva.

AUSTRALIAN URGES CAUTION

Especially in the League's Infancy —Cecil Says It Came Through the Crisis Well.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Oct. 12.—The Dominion representatives, in their speeches yesterday before the Imperial Conference on the League of Nations, which were given out tonight, showed that they were all convinced of the value of the League. At the same time they were evidently sobered in their enthusiasm.

The League has just gone through a crisis over the Greco-Italian dispute, and the opinions as to its achievements therein differ, but what all the speakers agreed on was that the attitude of Italy, one of the great powers, toward its obligations under the covenant had served to bring into stronger relief the great value which the smaller powers put upon the League and its power to protect their international rights.

The discussion began with an account by Lord Robert Cecil, British representative on the League Council, of the Greco-Italian trouble, and the contention that the League not only had taken the only course possible for it but had strengthened itself thereby. Lord Robert began by emphasizing the fact that the object of the League was "to promote international co-operation and to achieve international peace and security," and that it tries not to impose settlement, but to bring about agreement.

From this point of view he claimed the League had achieved a considerable success. He cited instances to prove how it had aided co-operation in humanitarian exertions, social activities, economic work, financial and administrative works, and then he turned to its efforts to bring about international peace.

The League, Lord Robert pointed out, was not asked to deal with the Russo-Polish and Turco-Greek wars, or to take up the question of reparations, yet it had been successful in such minor matters as the Aaland Islands, Upper Silesia and even the question of Vilna.

Lord Robert then took up the Italo-Greek question, which, he pointed out, was the first big question to come before the League, and he proceeded to give the Dominion representatives a historical summary of the events following the murder of General Tellini and the Italian mission on Aug. 27.

In doing so, he emphasized certain points as being of cardinal importance in explaining the action taken by the League. Thus, he showed that Italy had refused to accept the decision of the League to which Greece had offered to submit before the League had taken any action, and also that the Greek representative before the League Council always disclaimed any desire to put in force against Italy the League's economic pressure.

Lord Robert then spoke of the feeling within the League that the dispute was emphatically one within its competence, and referred particularly to the feeling among the representatives of the smaller powers at Geneva, many of whom happened to be Ministers with full authority.

Facilitated Ambassadors' Task.

Soon, however, it became apparent that the Italians were ready to accept the decision of the Conference of Ambassadors concerning the dispute, and that the Greeks were equally willing. So, Lord Robert went on, certain members of the Council of the League had come to the conclusion that "since our business under the covenant was to do everything we could to promote a settlement, and since the two parties had agreed to accept the decision of the Conference of Ambassadors, our object henceforward was to do everything we could to facilitate the task of the Ambassadors and to make their decision as nearly in accordance with the public opinion of the world, as expressed at Geneva, as we could.

"We therefore drew up the proposed terms of settlement, apart from the question of the evacuation of Corfu, and these were proposed by the Spanish member of the Council at a meeting of the Council on the 6th."

These proposals, Lord Robert said, were adopted almost unchanged by the Conference of Ambassadors. He knew that a number of different nations had represented how anxious they were that Italy and France would adopt them. Consequently he held that the League had fulfilled its functions, for, as I have said only too often, the business of the League was to promote agreements and settlements, and as long as there was any prospect of a settlement being reached it was not the duty of the Council of the League to intervene."

So, Lord Robert argued, the League had nothing to do with the Ambassadors' decisions, because the Greek Government had accepted these, and he added: "I am convinced that the concentration of public opinion at Geneva was one of the great factors in promoting what was, after all, a very rapid pacific solution of an exceedingly difficult question."

Lord Robert then took up the question of establishing the competence of the League to deal with such international disputes, and speaking of the meeting of the Assembly on Sept. 28 he said:

"Then occurred a really rather remarkable demonstration. Eight or ten representatives from all parts of the world, from all four quarters of the globe, one after the other, expressed in the strongest way their conviction that the League was competent to deal with the matter and their regret at some of the incidents that had occurred."

Thinks League Not Badly Hurt.

Speaking of Italy's occupation of Corfu, Lord Robert pointed out that "that is not as clear a matter as perhaps we—some of us—would wish. Undoubtedly, before the covenant, it had been quite common for countries of all kinds to exercise coercion of that kind."

He cited certain precedents, the occupation of Crete and the bombardment of Kagoshima in Japan by the British fleet in the year before Japan was opened up, to avenge a British subject murdered by one of the feudal clans.

"There was nothing, therefore, unusual in what the Italians did at Corfu. On the other hand, it has raised the question of whether the covenant permits any such action to be taken by one member of the League against another, without at any rate resorting to every means of discussion and debate in order to settle the dispute before such measures are taken."

Once again Lord Robert fell back on the argument that the sole business of the League was to promote a settlement. To prove that the course taken by the Council was absolutely right, he explained what had happened in this way:

"We, or I and several of the other members of the Council, desired that they should be referred to the International Court of Justice for an advisatory opinion. The Italians were opposed to that, in the case of one of the questions they proposed that it should be referred to a commission of jurists. Ultimately we agreed to a commission of jurists, and they agreed to a very strong declaration that any dispute between members of the League likely to lead to a rupture is within the sphere of action of the League, and that if the dispute cannot be settled by diplomacy, arbitration or judicial settlement it is the duty of the Council to deal with it under Article XV. of the covenant.

"In view of that very strong declaration, which seemed to me to go far to dispose of the question of competence, I did not myself think it was necessary to fight any longer for an immediate reference to the International Court of Justice."

So, summing up the whole matter, Lord Robert expressed the view that the way in which these disputes had been dealt with—in a strictly legal way, in his opinion—formed a "very valuable precedent."

"I do not recall," he said, "any instance of an international dispute of this nature, raising very difficult questions, which has been followed by an attempt to settle those questions by strictly legal and constitutional means, and if that precedent is established and is followed it really will lay the foundation, as it seems to me, for a gradual elaboration of international law which may be of enormous value for the future peace of the world. Therefore, formally the League is unhurt.

"Substantially, however, I do not think one can go as far as that. There has been a challenge by a great power of the competence of the League. It is quite true that it was met immediately by a very remarkable rally of all the smaller powers to the support of the League. It showed a very strong, vigorous, vital feeling on the part of all those powers, not only in Europe, but all over the world, that the League must be supported, that it was the only guarantee of justice between States, and that the small States particularly were vitally interested in the maintenance of the authority of the League. I think that was a very valuable counterweight to the repudiation—I think we must admit it was repudiation—by a great power of the competence of the League, at any rate for a time. I do not think that repudiation has done the League's authority as much harm as some people believe."

Wants All Britain to Back League.

"Apart from actual repudiation by a great power," Lord Robert proceeded, "the other unfavorable symptom that struck me at Geneva was a certain want of confidence in the Council of the League by the members of the Council. They did not feel as sure of themselves as I could have wished. They did not quite know what it would be safe for them to do. That is, perhaps, not a matter of surprise, considering the short time which the League has been in existence, but I do think, if I may say so, that it points to the necessity for those countries that believe in the League, as I hope we do, giving to the League on all possible occasions every support that they can, and making it the most essential part of our foreign policy.

"On the other hand, I think we may say—those of us who believe in the League—that there were very many encouraging things about this crisis, not only the matters to which I have already alluded. I think we may say with great truth that the machinery of the League worked well, that it all worked, as we used to be told, 'according to plan'; that the dispute, when it was presented, came naturally to the Council; the Council naturally considered it; there was no hitch or difficulty.

"I myself believe that the publicity in which the later stages of the controversy took place was all to the good. I believe it enabled public opinion to support the League, to support what I think was justice. I think the effect of public opinion was exactly what we who believed in it thought it would be. It was so overwhelming that no country could stand against it, and when it became clear that the public opinion of the world was on one side that country had to modify its policy in accordance with the opinion expressed.

"Somebody said to me the other day that the British Empire never had any foreign policy except to keep the peace. I believe that is roughly true, at any rate true for very many decades, if not centuries past. We have tried to keep the peace. That has been the great object of British foreign policy, working not by force, not by power, but by trying to promote friendliness among the nations. That has been, I believe, the broad object, sometimes more and sometimes less successfully pursued by the successive British Ministers. I believe it is still the essential thing that we should aim at.

"We now have in our hands an instrument for that purpose in the League of Nations, incomparably more effective than anything we have had before. We ought to do our utmost to strengthen the League and make it more and more the cornerstone of our policy, for unless we can get rid of the war machinery, the ideas of force and compulsion, I do not myself think there is any hope that we shall see a pacified and restored Europe."

Dominions All Pledge Support.

In the discussion that followed, Premier Bruce of Australia said a strong feeling was growing in the commonwealth that the League presented at least the "germ of hope to maintain the peace of the world."

But he urged it to show great discretion in the next few years, the period of its infancy. The great thing was to keep the idea of the League alive.

General Smuts of South Africa admitted that the League had not realized the great anticipations of its originators, on account of its inexperience and the difficulties of the times, but he still believed in it as a great stabilizing force, working on the side of the ideals for which the British Empire stands.

Premier Mackenzie King of Canada called attention to the value of the League in focussing, and thereby increasing a thousandfold the strength of public opinion on the Italo-Greek dispute, merely because the "League authority to a certain extent had apparently been ignored." This was certainly the case in Canada, and he believed also in the United States, though she was not a member of the League. He also referred to the good work Lord Robert Cecil had done for the League in his recent visit to America and Canada.

Sir Lomer Gouin, Premiers Massey and Warren of New Zealand and Newfoundland, Lord Peel as representative of India, and Professor McNeill of the Irish Free State also spoke.

Dominions to Seek More Preference.

LONDON, Oct. 12 (Associated Press).—Although there seems to be little possibility of the British Government adopting a general protectionist policy, the indications are that the Dominions intend to give the mother country an intensive educational course in the principles of protection. It is understood that Premier Bruce of Australia intends to remain in England after the Imperial Conference has adjourned, and to travel extensively through the provinces, explaining the details of the preferential program and pointing out the benefits which he considers England, as well as the Dominions, would gain from it.

The liberal leaders do not fear any immediate change in the Government's policy. They view any general increase in the taxation on foodstuffs as unthinkable. They consider Premier Baldwin's Cabinet held by former Premier Bonar Law's pledge to maintain the general fiscal policy approved by the voters at the last general election. The free traders, however, are well aware that the Government, by attempting to placate the overseas protectionists with a few morsels of dried fruit, sugar and tobacco, have taken action which heads toward tariff mazes from which the Government may have the greatest difficulty in receding.

Having met with partial success in receiving the promise of preference for fruits, the Dominions are considered likely to continue to urge similar consideration for all of their products, for although the expressions of gratitude from overseas have been numerous since Sir son the free traders throughout the country are actively preparing to repel the preferential policy. The executive of the Woman's National Liberal Federation have passed a resolution declaring that organization viewed with alarm the signs of a protectionist campaign, and urging all Liberal women to reaffirm their faith in free trade.

Government officials, however, point out that the Liberal alarm is being fostered largely for Autumn political campaign material, as the Government forces, as well as the avowed free traders, realize that the adoption of any general preferential scheme while the people are in their present stat of mind concerning the prices of foodstuffs would be likely to prove suicidal to themselves.

CALLS CORFU CRISIS A BLOW TO LEAGUE

Professor Brown of Princeton Says It Reveals Its Feebleness.

GLAD WE ARE NOT INVOLVED

After Study in Europe He Declares Our Policy of Aloofness Seems Justified.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., Oct. 12.—Doubt as to the ability of the League of Nations to settle important international disputes has been further justified by the recent Corfu incident, according to Philip Marshall Brown, Professor of International Law at Princeton University. In this case, the first severe test the League has experienced, Italy has struck a grave blow at the underlying theories upon which the League is founded, he says. To claim that the settlement of the Italian-Greek controversy has been a victory for the League of Nations is a "gross distortion of facts," explained Professor Brown, who has just returned to Princeton from Europe.

Pointing out that after Greece had formally appealed to the League Italy indignantly protested that the League was incompetent to deal with the situation, Professor Brown reviewed the international significance of the dispute and settlement as follows: "Most of the members of the Council and Assembly, including Lord Robert Cecil, desired to make this a test case in order to demonstrate that the League was competent. Wiser counsel prevailed, and the question was referred to the Council of Ambassadors sitting in Paris.

"There is no disguising the fact that the action of Italy constitutes a defiance of the League and of its basic principles. The seizure of territory as a guarantee of reparations for an alleged wrong is obviously an utterly indefensible line of action pending an impartial investigation of the facts.

"The question of State responsibility for crimes such as the murder of the Italian General in Albania is always an open one, which can only be answered after an investigation of the facts. The action of Italy rendered this quite impossible. The Council of Ambassadors therefore was driven to concede Italy's demand for an indemnity of 50,000,000 lire, before there had been any investigation whatever.

"To say that the League has thy influence in this lamentable decision is obviously placing a very undesirable responsibility upon the League. To say that it deserves any credit for the solution is a curious kind of reasoning.

"The precedent reveals that the nations of Europe are far from ready to adopt and respect the principles that we have so earnestly insisted upon, and that we may have reason to be thankful that we have not been put in a position of using measures of coercion on the Italian Government in this crisis, exactly as we have not been placed in the position of settling the Ruhr difficulty. Our policy of non-participation in the political affairs of Europe would seem to be thoroughly justified by these events."

SUN APPEALS TO POWERS.

SHANGHAI, Oct. 12.—Dr. Sun Yat-sen is officially calling the attention of the powers to what he calls the nationwide reputation of Marshal Tsao Kun as President of China. Dr. Sun declares that Tsao Kun is illiterate and uneducated; that he looted Peking in 1912, and that he is primarily responsible for the Lincheng train outrage.

"His election," he says, "was brought about in circumstances of illegality and corruption which make it an outrage on any nation of civilized habits, thought and action."

Dr. Sun says that resistance to Tsao Kun is finding expression in the formation of a truly national government. Meanwhile, in the most solemn manner he warns the powers against the recognition of Tsao Kun, which he says, would only prolong internecine strife.

FRENCH NOW WONDER ABOUT RUHR WAGES

Money for the Germans Who Return to Work Presents a Serious Problem for Paris.

By EDWIN L. JAMES.

PARIS, Oct. 12.—The cessation of Ruhr relief by Berlin will, without doubt, bring more or less of a showdown on the cessation of passive resistance. It is announced that the payment of money by Berlin to the Ruhr workers to remain idle will be doubled up to Oct. 17, then diminished by one-fourth on Nov. 1, one-half on Nov. 11 and shortly thereafter suppressed.

On the one hand this means the incentive to the Ruhr workers to remain idle will be removed and logically they would be disposed to go back to work to earn money. From this angle the development is very favorable to the Franco-Belgian occupation. On the other hand, if these 1 million or more go back to work they have got to be paid by some one. Who is to pay them and with what?

There lies the severe test for the French and Belgians. The mark is tumbling so fast it is no longer dependable, and with Berlin stopping the shipment of paper money to the Ruhr, it is obviously impossible for the French and Belgians to lay their hands on enough money to supply wages.

For the same and other reasons the Ruhr industrialists say they cannot find money to pay wages. Although it has been discussed for months, no Rhineland money has been established. Thus a very nice question will be raised for the occupying authorities. Indeed, those in close touch with the Ruhr situation regard the problem as really serious.

Obviously, if Germany can establish another money eventually by commercial processes it will get into the Ruhr and be available for daily needs. But such money is not yet existent, nor will it be within the next week or ten days, when it is expected the Ruhr workers will be flocking back to work with the expectation of being paid next Saturday night.

It is worth recalling that the former Regierungspräsident Grutsner is quoted as saying the situation will get so bad in fifteen days French soldiers will be firing on hungry German workmen.

The French say Stinnes and other Ruhr industrialists possess vast wealth, much of it held abroad, and can pay the workers. But suppose they refuse.

In official quarters at Paris it is impossible to get a satisfactory answer as to how the French propose to meet what seems a coming crisis. If M. Poincaré has a plan he is not telling it.

ULSTER QUESTIONS NOW STIR IRELAND

Craig Declares He Will Give Up No Territory—Bishops Say Catholics Are Oppressed.

DUBLIN, Oct. 12.—Vehement utterances from Ulster provide almost the only interesting topic in Irish affairs at the moment. Yesterday the Northern Premier, Sir James Craig, declared that so far as he was concerned not one loyalist within the boundaries of the six counties would be transferred to the Free State against his will, and he made special reference to the counties of Fermanagh and Tyrone.

He also bespoke the complete disappearance of the election system of proportional representation.

Today came another voice from Ulster, though raised in Dublin. Cardinal Logue and Archbishop O'Donnell, his coadjutor in Armagh, and the bishops of Derry, Clogher, Kilmore, Dromore and Down and Connor issued a statement point out the systematic wrong done to the Catholic minority in Northern Ireland.

Their lordships referred to the abolition of the proportional representation system and gerrymandering of the constituencies, thus ousting Catholics from public life.

They charged the Northern Government with starving Catholic schools and impeding Catholic teachers. They referred to the oath of allegiance, not only to the King but to all the Northern Government, for all, including Catholic chaplains holding positions of public emolument, and they dealt, too, with the attitude of the leading ministers of the Northern Government on the boundary question with regard to Fermanagh and Tyrone, where a large majority favors inclusion in the Free State.

GERMAN MOBS RIOT AND PILLAGE SHOPS

Eleven Persons Killed at Solingen in Fighting Between Citizens and Police.

HEAVY GUARDS IN BERLIN

Crowds of Men and Women Attack Stores—Serious Disturbances in Leipsic and Cologne.

DUESSELDORF, Oct. 12 (Associated Press).—The disorders which began last evening at Solingen, in British occupied territory, continued today, the casualty list now totaling eleven dead, including the Commissary of Police, and thirty-five wounded. Many stores have been pillaged. The British troops have not yet interfered. Other unemployed men are marching from Grafrath to help their comrades.

At Hoechst, where 2,000 unemployed besieged the City Hall, the German police fired on the crowd, killing one and wounding ten others.

The pillaging also continued today at Cologne, and the police fired when the crowd stoned them.

The French authorities conferred today with the German officials and representatives of the employers and unemployed regarding plans for relieving the distress of the people here.

After obtaining approval from Berlin the city agreed to increase the amount of relief for the unemployed to 350,000,000 marks each day, with an additional 50,000,000 to heads of families, but as even this is admittedly inadequate the city officials are trying to induce the Berlin Government to augment it. Free soup kitchens are being considered.

The French cavalry today was patrolling the streets and the population was forbidden to move about after 10 o'clock at night.

COLOGNE, Oct. 12.—As much discontent was evident among the workers today as yesterday and the unemployed have been in a dangerous mood all day. The German authorities have ascertained that among them are some of the armed separatists who appeared at Düsseldorf on Red Sunday as the "Rhineland defense force."

During the afternoon plundering again began and the police were rushed to the disturbed area in motor cars. They were obliged to fire in the air and charge the crowd with drawn sabres and truncheons. I visited the disturbed areas and found all the shops closed and barricaded and an angry crowd parading the streets. Beyond the fact that the police were jeered at and that my taxicab was greeted with cries of "Schieber!" there were no signs of disorder.

But serious troubles have since developed. There have been more breaking of windows, plundering and police charges, with some shooting and there have been serious disorders at various points in the city. Several persons have been wounded.

Rioting and attempted plundering continued throughout the evening in many districts, but at 11 P. M. order appeared to have been restored though the police were still busy moving the crowd moving and many ambulance men were in attendance to remove casualties.

From 5 to 8 P. M. numerous conflicts occurred between the police and the crowd, which numbered many thousands. The police fired a large number of rounds wounding, according to their own accounts, several persons. A woman was killed and at least on two occasions when the German police charged the crowd British soldiers received slight injuries. Only the intervention of their comrades prevented the soldiers from retaliating.

While complaints are made of the brutality of police, so far as I could see they kept their heads in a situation which was often perilous.

A considerable number of arrests have been made. The material damage appears to be much less than on the occasion of the visit of Gen. Nollet.

Serious disorders involving loss of life also are reported from Düsseldorf tonight, but details are lacking.

At the Wald, near Solingen, several thousand unemployed are making a demonstration before the Rathaus.

The situation in the Ruhr is equally dangerous. The miners today received their usual half weekly payment, but it was miserably insufficient. The men's bitterness is increased by the fact that tomorrow the first holiday shift, as the ironic German phrase goes, will be "worked." In fact, there will be no work and no pay. Tuesday will be another blank day.

Heavy Police Guards for Berlin.

By CYRIL BROWN.

BERLIN, Oct. 12.—The Security Police were ordered to hold themselves in "heightened-alarm preparedness" today, ready to respond instantly to riot calls. Heavily armed police patrol automobiles circulated through the principal streets and crowded residential sections "to calm the populace" as a result of food riots in Northwest Berlin this morning, where housewives, unable to buy food at the prices running into billions, held an indignation meeting around the market hall and then started to storm it. Clashing with police, the crowd of nearly 1,000 started a demonstration. The procession was broken up and dispersed by a bayonet charge by the police.

There is general food unrest throughout Greater Berlin as a result of the breath-taking price increases.

In Leipsic serious food riots began early this afternoon, engineered by demagogues inflaming and inciting the crowds of unemployed. A potato cart was stormed, overturned and plundered by a mob, was the signal for large-scale trouble. The returns are not in yet.

Although the mark officially went up today from 5 to 4 billion to the dollar price rises are not checked thereby. Some prices have risen 200, 300, even 400 per cent. for several successive days, in some cases several times daily.

Butter today cost 2½ billions, margarine 1 billion, lard 1½ billions, sausage 800 million to 1 billion, and bacon 1,300,000,000.

The cheapest frozen meat is three hundred million, fish two hundred million, potatoes thirty-five million, tomatoes sixty million, cauliflower one hundred and twenty million, a pound. Bread jumped to three hundred and forty million for the standard loaf. Tomorrow one egg will cost seventy million, street car fare twenty million.

The sudden tidal wave of billion mark prices for commodities of daily life has caused an acute paper money shortage. This morning the banks had entirely run out of paper marks, and the pinch prevailed throughout greater Berlin. This afternoon the Reichsbank threw its paper reserves in the form of bales of five hundred million and one billion mark notes, done up in packages of fifty and one hundred billions, onto the money market and temporarily relieved the strain.

One package of one hundred billion mark notes is done up in the Reichsbank with a broad black paper band, and in the financial district the gallows humoresque remark is made that the Reichsbank already is putting on mourning for the dead mark.

Worthless as paper marks are, there is a clamorous demand for them, while as a curious complication payment by checks is being increasingly rejected, the demand being for spot cash. The reason is that banks will only credit the amount of deposited checks after three days, allegedly owing to overpressure of clerical work. On the other hand, if a depositor draws against the amount of deposits before three days there is a heavy interest charge imposed by the bank, in some cases 3 per cent per diem. The same charge is inflicted on Americans and others who sell foreign currency checks or draw on letters of credit.

There is another reason why checks are being turned down as a means of payment. In many cases by the time they are collected the amount has shrunk to the vanishing point. Cash in paper marks is preferable, since it can be passed on quickly in return for goods or services, lowering the depreciation risk.

In many cases shops, hotels and restaurants still willing to accept checks make a 10 or 15 per cent. extra charge. Some stores curiously offer a rebate for cash payment. Fuchser's restaurant, well-known to Americans, today prominently displayed a sign: "Checks accepted only at 85 per cent. of value."

"Many of my guests had no money yesterday and I lost a fortune overnight by taking checks," this harassed beefsteak exponent explained.

Under a new ordinance to be promulgated tomorrow the retail trade will be permitted to charge and calculate prices in gold marks. Hitherto retail prices legally had to be based on the original paper mark cost price plus a reasonable percentage of profit, so that law-abiding retailers almost literally were forced to give goods away in some cases and in most cases were forced to sell goods far below the price at which they could restock.

Berlin, and for that matter all Germany, will enjoy another novelty after Oct. 15. The Germans have invented another new mark called the T mark, to be used throughout the German banking world. All figures will be rounded to the nearest even thousand, then the three zeros dropped and in their place a capital T. M., the abbreviations for thousand marks. The public is asked to adopt this practice.

SELLS 52,000-ACRE ADIRONDACK TRACT

William Rockefeller Estate Completes Disposal of 65,000-Acre Preserve.

PRICE IN SEVEN FIGURES

John N. McDonald of Utica and Col. McAlpin, Hotel Owner, Are the Purchasers.

Special to The New York Times.

UTICA, N. Y., Oct. 12.—The estate of William Rockefeller completed this week the sale of 52,000 acres of Adirondack preserve adjoining Paul Smith's in Franklin County, the purchaser being John N. McDonald of Utica and Colonel Benjamin McAlpin, the New York hotel owner. The contract, which was signed Tuesday, represented an amount running into seven figures. Most of the land consists of virgin timber, but many camps and buildings and much equipment are included in the property.

This sale completes the disposal of the 65,000-acre Adirondack preserve owned by Mr. Rockefeller at his death.

Lumbering operations will be carried out on the tract but in such a way as not to interfere with its scenic beauties. There is a main building, 300 by 300 feet. There are seven other large building and eleven camps, all completely equipped. These will be retained. At present twenty-two wardens protect the property from trespassers. The largest building is heated by five hot water boilers.

The property is bounded on the east by Paul Smith's and State land, on the south by Turner and tiSate land, on the west by Cutting and the Oval Dish Company and on the north by the St. Regis Paper Company holdings.

Mr. Rockefeller made his first purchase of Adirondack forest land in 1898 when he bought 25,000 acres from Y. A. Ducey for $50,000. This property was transformed into a private park. Additional purchases increased the preserve to about 65,000 acres. Last month the Rockefeller estate sold about 13,000 acres in the Debar mountain section to H. H. Reynolds of Malone, N. Y., and Howard Taylor of Utica, lumber men.

ASO VOLCANO, IN JAPAN, IS DISCHARGING ASHES

Near-By Villages Affected—Severe Storm Sweeps the West Coast of Sakhalin.

TOKIO, Oct. 11 (Associated Press).—The Aso volcano (twenty-seven miles east of Kumamoto, one of the largest in the world, has been active for several days, according to the Gita correspondent of the Tokio Asahi. The rumbling can be heard for many miles, it is said, and large quantities of ashes have been falling in near-by villages. The last previous eruption of Aso was in 1891, when ashes and dust were carried as far as Kumamoto.

A dispatch from Tayoharu, Sakhalin, says a severe storm swept the west coast of the island on Oct. 7 and that four Japanese steamers anchored off Cape Kunotoro were stranded. Two of them are reported to have been seriously damaged. It has not been determined whether any lives were lost.

"Anxiously we face the coming Winter. Through the ruthless and selfish policy of capital and the brazen activities of the Fascist organizations the unity of the German Reich is most gravely threatened. In Bavaria in occupied areas separatism rears its head. Monarchists and big industry make an alliance with the country's enemy. Against this the Saxon Government declares we stand firmly to the Reich and will fight to the utmost for Germany's unity.

"Be convinced our call to rally in defense of German unity will find an echo. We expect from the discipline of the spirit of sacrifice of the people to succeed in triumphing over the nation's enemies, leading the Saxon people to better future."

Bavaria to Resist Berlin Rule.

MUNICH, Oct. 12.—If Chancellor Stresemann succeeds, as it is expected he will, in obtaining tomorrow assent of the Reichstag to the act giving him "extraordinary authority," the Bavarian Government will oppose that authority passively but none the less determinedly. During the last fortnight Munich has been the centre of resistance to this step by the Chancellor, not on the ground that Germany does not want a Dictator but solely on the ground that Stresemann is not the kind of Dictator Bavarians want. Their policy has failed so far as Parliament is concerned, but there remains for them concerted disobedience to all decrees and enactments of the Dictator should he receive full power. That is the policy which it has been decided will be followed here. There will be no active opposition to Berlin decrees and no fomenting of ideas of civil strife. Hitler's raid along the Thuringian frontier the other evening is looked on with disfavor by the Government. There will be no encouragement of the idea of separatism. There will be no open quarrel between Bavaria and the rest of Germany. But there will be studied disobedience to Berlin's orders, steady delay in fulfilling any requests, steady sabotage of authority which Chancellor Stresemann is seeking to have conferred on him.

Cry of Unconstitutional Rule.

This passive resistance will be based on the cry that the creation of Stresemann's dictatorship is an infringement of the Weimar constitution. But the real reason will be the complete distrust which exists here of Stresemann's policy toward France and his attitude toward the Socialists. Naturally the latter of these reasons is most kept to the front in all discussions here. Bavaria's policy has been to rid herself of any Socialist Government and the second step is to try to rid the whole Reich of that control. Dislike of a Socialist régime is always based on the allegation that it has been the Socialists who have landed Germany in the present monetary and commercial chaos. Here there is a steady and strong campaign going on among the working classes to show how the tremendously increased cost of living and the collapse of the mark are the result of Socialist legislation.

Whatever the merits of the argument, there is no doubt that in Bavaria it is having an effect. The difficulty of making both ends meet are so tremendous that few workmen's families have meat more than once a week and when the argument is presented to them that the situation is the result of the Socialists' Administration, it is not difficult to win recruits to reaction.

Von Kahr has added enormously to his authority and popularity by his decrees against hoarding and against exporting food from the country. Though the Bavarian peasants are the strongest supporters of reaction they are not above preferring to sell their produce to the Italian, Swiss and Austrian markets for better money than to dispose of it for marks within their own country. There are stories of music teachers who have made fortunes teaching the daughters of farmers music at half a pound of butter and two eggs a lesson.

Peasants Support Reaction.

But the reaction against the peasants is not in favor of Socialism as it has been in Prussia and Saxony, but in favor of a strong reactionary government, such as Von Kahr's. Here in Bavaria the strength of this change of opinion has been so great as to encourage many people to believe that the dissolution of the Reichstag and new election would be a fatal step for Stresemann and a success for Bavaria. It is argued that if the revolt against the Socialists is not confined to this part of the country and that the reactionary forces would obtain added strength in the Reichstag should an election take place. Even more suited to Bavarian hopes and expectations would be the failure of Stresemann's dictatorship in contrast to the success of that of Von Kahr with an election at the end of that trial period. Meanwhile there will be no disturbance in Bavaria if Von Kahr can prevent it. The pressure which he is trying to exercise on Germany is pacific. Though Hitler, Ludendorff and others have made Bavaria their home, the government is giving them no encouragement. Their ideas are not Bavarian ideas, but Pan-Germanism and restorations of various forms, while Von Kahr and Von Knilling are for Bavaria first and for the rest of Germany with Bavaria only if the rest is willing to tread the road which Bavaria marks out.

STRESEMANN SURE HIS BILL WILL PASS

Decree Putting Taxes on Gold Basis Creates More Optimistic Feeling.

By CYRIL BROWN.

Copyright, 1923, by The New York Times Company.
By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Oct. 12.—A constitutional amendment conferring near dictatorial powers on the Stresemann Government is expected to be steam-rollered through the Reichstag tomorrow under renewed threat of Reichstag dissolution. Absentee members of the coalition parties have been urged by telegraph surely to return to Berlin by tomorrow.

Stinnes and Director Voegler have replied regretting they will be unavoidably absent as their presence is more necessary in the Ruhr.

Melodramatic efforts to insure the passage of the constitutional amendment include the urgent recall of the Minister to Austria, Dr. Pfeiffer of the Centre Party, and the Socialist Minister to Latvia, Dr. Koester. Both are hurrying from Vienna and Riga respectively to cast votes for the Government measure in the Reichstag, of which they are members. The Centrum hopes to round up ten more members in the Reichstag tomorrow than on Tuesday, while the Social-Democrade Party has persuaded the dissident Left Wing to vote against the measure rather than leave the assembly hall before the vote is taken, as paradoxically, by voting against it the Left Socialists will insure the measure's passage, whereas by abstaining from voting and leaving the hall they would jeopardise it.

To adopt a constitutional amendment two-thirds of the total Reichstag membership must be present when the vote is taken and it must then be passed by a two-thirds majority. The Reichstag membership is 459, therefore at least 306 members must be present when the vote is taken tomorrow of whom at least 204 must vote "aye."

Dr. Stresemann tonight feels so sure of the passage that he plans to leave tomorrow with the Undersecretary of the Foreign Office, Baron von Maltzahn, known as "the Red Baron," and his Secretary of Chancellery, for Bregenz, Austria, to meet and confer with the Austrian Chancellor, Dr. Seipel, on Sunday.

A more optimistic view of the general situation was taken in political and financial circles today, largely due to the belief that the constitutional amendment will be passed by a small but safe margin and that the measure would provide a safety valve and permit Stresemann to tackle foreign political problems with increased prestige and authority.

Importance was also attached to Stresemann's impending conference with Seipel and to the new ordinance placing taxes on a gold basis, reforming and simplifying the whole tax scheme, which is interpreted as material progress in the right direction.

FRENCH SIGN TERMS WITH RUHR MINERS

All Expelled Employes to Return and Troops to Leave the Mines.

PARIS, Oct. 12.—The Matin states that 7,000 workmen of the Koenig mine, near Bochum, have decided to return to work in full accord with the authorities of the occupation.

This is but a single instance, the paper says, of offers which the French occupational authorities are receiving for the recommencement of work. Industrialists and syndicates of all types are negotiating or making overtures for negotiations.

DUESSELDORF, Oct. 12 (Associated Press).—An agreement has been signed between the German miners' unions and the French authorities for the return to work of all the miners and officials of the Dorstfeld mine, one of the largest in the Ruhr, which the French occupied some time ago to exploit it themselves. A similar agreement was made for the Bergfeld mine in the same district.

Under the agreement all the expelled miners' officials and office employes are allowed to return.

The terms of the agreement, which is expected to serve as a model for similar settlements with other big mines, are as follows:

First—All the miners, officials, directors and office employes who have been expelled from the occupied area will be returned, without exception. All who remained and worked for the French will retain their places. The French guaranteeing these parties protection against annoyance by those who left when the mines were occupied.

Second—The wages and working conditions for all employes will be settled by their respective organisations without French interference.

Third—All agreements fixed between the miners and their employers will be valid for all the German workers, whether they work for German employers or under French control.

Fourth—The French Control Committee retains the right to make any extra special agreements with the returned miners.

Fifth—The German miners and office employes will have the same working hours as obtain in the mines not occupied by the French.

Sixth—The Workmen's Council law and other German workmen's laws are fully recognised by the French.

Seventh—The social and insurance laws, such as accident, sick, invalid and pension insurance, to remain as before.

Eighth—As soon as the miners resume work all French sentries or other signs of militiary occupation will be immediately withdrawn.

Ninth—All the German organisations for mine administration, such as police and fire protection, to remain in force as before the occupation.

CONSIDER THE ONION

The word "onion" comes from the Latin "unio" meaning unity or oneness.

Certainly there is unity between onions and eggs when made into a delicious omelet;

And certainly there is oneness of opinion as to the dietetic value of such a combination;

Hence the popularity of the delightfully tender onion omelets served at CHILDS.

There are as many calories in an onion omelet as in three lamb chops.

LAST-MINUTE PLEAS FOR REGISTRATION

Republican Committeeman Hilles Urges Voters to Do Their Duty.

HE ATTACKS TAMMANY

Chairman Leslie J. Tompkins and Miss Helen Varick Boswell Call for Action.

Although registration in the city has shown signs of improvement, the Republicans are still worried over the fact that the so-called "high-brow" Republican districts are far behind in their normal registration and the party leaders continued yesterday to appeal to the voters to do their duty. The latest appeal came from Charles D. Hilles, Republican National committeeman for New York:

"Because an independent judiciary should be chosen and Tammany prevented from controlling it and the entire State Government, it is highly important that every citizen in Greater New York register this week and vote next month for good government," said Mr. Hilles.

"The issues of this contest make it vital. The organization dominated in turn by Tweed, Croker and Murphy last year swept the State with the exception of a slender majority in the Assembly. Its leader in Albany, Governor Smith, has by rank extravagance doubled the tax rate and thereby raised rents. Since he first took office State expenditures have jumped from $81,000,000 to $156,000,000. Already during this year more than 500 new jobs have been created for followers of Smith and Murphy. Nineteen hundred more have had their pay raised.

"It is estimated that at the coming session of the Legislature it will be necessary to again double the tax rate. This will have further effect upon city taxes and rents. Not satisfied with this disastrous result, Tammany wishes to gain control of the next Assembly in order to provide contracts for itself, without the slightest check or hindrance from any party of opposition.

Governor Smith now talks of his so-called program, put forward in order to give him more power, in order to hide the fact that he has thrown the State Government into chaos with the power he already has. A victory for Tammany in this city next month would be a victory for Governor Smith and bad State government.

Tammany and the Courts.

"In the city itself this organization, which never forgets anything and never learns anything, has fisunted the idea of a non-partisan judiciary. It will have none but its own partisans on the bench. It relies right thinking and independent citizens, believing that they will fail to do their duty to register and vote. Murphy has given his orders that Tammany must control the bench and dominate the State.

"Certainly Republicans who have witnessed Tammany misgovernment should foresee what would happen if Murphy and Smith gained their purpose. A saturnalia of waste would result. And they should remember that if they register now they would have a part in the primaries next Spring to select delegates to the national convention and shape the party policy of the next campaign. With Tammany in absolute control of the Governor, the Senate, the Assembly, the City and the Judiciary, all good citizens would have cause to despair. The only way to prevent this is by registering now and voting against it."

Leslie J. Tompkins, Chairman of the Non-partisan Judiciary Campaign Committee, who will represent the ten candidates nominated on the Republican ticket for the Supreme Court bench said yesterday that a determined fight upon the Tammany candidates would be waged. He grude both men and women to register saying:

"Our country will be in serious danger if you let corrupt politicians own your courts. The freedom of the individual and his life and his property are secure only so long as our courts are free. Keep Murphy and Foley, off the bench. Don't let them defile our temple of justice. Keep our courts clean. Do your bit. Register."

Miss Boswell Appeals to Women.

Following the example of the men leaders of the party, who have expressed concern over the light registration, Miss Helen Varick Boswell, Vice Chairman of the New York County Republican women, issued a last moment appeal yesterday to Republican women and urged them to register today.

"Columbus discovered America 431 years ago today," Miss Boswell said, "but I am afraid he would not be especially proud of a certain portion of it—Manhattan—if he were to return and see how lightly many citizens are taking their responsibility for governing this country. The indifference of the average citizen toward registering is a menace to self government in this country. It seems remarkable to contrast how hard women worked to get the vote with the indifference of a large number of them toward exercising it. They seem unable to realize that this is not an 'off year' in politics, but one of the most important years.

"The present situation requires drastic measures. The crux of the present fight for a Republican Assembly and for an unbossed, unpledged judiciary is to get out a large registration. The importance of registering must somehow or other seep into the consciousness of the citizens who have not already attended to their civic duty. Tomorrow will be too late. Today is the last day."

Miss Boswell has invited the women district leaders and other prominent Republican women to a reception at the Women's National Republican Club on Wednesday, Oct. 17, to meet the Republican Assembly candidates in New York County.

FEAR MANY WILL LOSE VOTE.

Republican Leaders Worried Over Literacy Test Requirements.

Republican leaders are not satisfied with the ruling of the Appellate Division that new voters this year must take a literacy test as provided by the State educational authorities. This means that they must go to any one of fifty-nine public schools and subscribe to the test as presented by the teacher in charge. The Republicans feel that many new voters will be disfranchised because they will not take the trouble to comply with the ruling of the court. A Harvard graduate sought information yesterday from a worker in the Sixth Assembly District, of which Republican County Chairman Samuel S. Koenig is leader. The district worker informed the Harvard graduate just what he should do.

"Too much trouble," said the college man. "I've got an engagement to play golf and I'm late now. Guess I'll not bother with registering."

"Where should I have advised him to go?" asked the district worker, in reporting the occurrence to Chairman Koenig.

"You should have told him to go to hell," said Koenig.

In the fifteen public schools in Brooklyn where the literacy test was applied yesterday about 15 per cent. of the applicants qualified. The only school which reported 100 per cent. was Public School 100, in the Coney Island district. In all, 195 applicants applied here and all passed. Out of the number only two new voters were foreign born. The entire 195 satisfactorily answered the questions put to them by the principal in charge. In the sections of the borough where the foreign born population predominated, however, many applicants could not answer the questions.

Literacy tests applied to applicants in public schools in the Bronx showed better results than in other sections of the city. In P. S. 6, Tremont and Vyse Avenues, eleven out of 200 failed in the test. In P. S. 61, out of eighty-seven applicants, twenty failed, and in P. S. 43 there were twenty failures out of 200 applicants.

CITY REGISTRATION BEHIND LAST YEAR

Total for Five Days Shows Drop of 66,683 for All Boroughs.

QUEENS HAS GAIN OF 2,020

Decreases Are Manhattan, 36,674; Brooklyn, 24,574; the Bronx, 5,915, and Richmond 1,540.

The city registration slipped backward yesterday, compared with the day before, and it is still below the figures of last year, as well as of 1920 and 1921. Queens was the only borough to show an improvement over last year, and the increase there is due to the growth in population. Manhattan is 36,674 behind the figures for the five days' registration last year; Brooklyn is 24,574 behind, the Bronx 5,915 and Richmond 1,540, while Queens is 2,020 better than the first five days a year ago.

The total registration in the entire city for the first five days this year is 703,799. For the first five days last year it was 770,482, or 66,683 more than this year in all boroughs. The following tables show the total registration by Assembly Districts in all boroughs this year, together with the registration last year and 1921 and 1920:

DROWNS IN THE NILE.

American Globe Trotter Loses Life When Boat Capsizes.

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

CAIRO, Oct. 12.—C. R. Morrison of Philadelphia, who, with Manning Wein of New York, started early in 1921 from Maine to walk around the world on a wager, was drowned yesterday a few miles south of Cairo through the capsizing of a boat in which he intended to reach Khartoum.

Morrison and Wein had traversed twenty-two States of America and had passed through Japan, China, the Philippines, Indo-China and Siam, when Wein withdrew. Morrison continued traveling via India to Egypt, and was joined at Cairo by Jean Meyers, a Swiss flying officer.

Although the Nile was in flood, the men set out yesterday in a small craft, which was upset soon.

Morrison's body has not been found.

4 MEN ATTACK POLICEMAN.

One Who Was Captured Held in $3,000 Bail.

Patrolman John McGowan of the Flushing Station, Queens, found four men fighting early yesterday in the hallway at 215 East Sixty-seventh Street. When he interfered the men jumped on him, he said, and three of them escaped.

McGowan arrested Joseph Perry, 29, an elevator constructor, of 421 East 144th Street, the Bronx. Perry was charged with having struck the policeman, and he was held by Magistrate Oberwager in $3,000 bail for examination Oct. 15. McGowan was attended by an ambulance surgeon after he had locked up his prisoner.

DRY LEADERS START ENFORCEMENT DRIVE

Open at Washington First of Twenty Conferences to Bring Question to Issue.

HARDING INSPIRED MOVE

Fred Smith Declares It Aims to Rally Churches to Active Efforts.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 12.—Spurred to action by what they described as apathy toward law enforcement, dry leaders met here tonight for a three-days' conference, to bring the question to an issue.

Enforcement advocates from all parts of the country, including many leaders in the movement which made the Eighteenth Amendment a part of the Constitution, will take part in the deliberations. They hope to outline plans which will provide practical and sure effectiveness of the dry laws, and to rally church and civic bodies to their support.

Explaining the purpose of the meeting, which has been designated as a "citizenship conference," Fred B. Smith of New York, Chairman of the Executive Committee, said today that it had been inspired for former President Harding. According to Mr. Smith, Mr. Harding told him that the trouble with prohibition enforcement resulted largely from the indifference of religious and civic orders, which demanded the Eighteenth Amendment and failed to give it active support after it became effective.

Prohibition Commissioner Haynes expressed the same opinion, Mr. Smith said, asserting that the people who worked for the dry law demobilized after it was enacted.

"We are going to awaken the churches and civic organizations to the urgent need of good citizenship, with special reference to the Eighteenth Amendment," Mr. Smith said. "At least twenty conventions will be held in the principal cities of the country within the next twelve months and will be stimulated by the participation of the foremost leaders in the national life."

Mr. Smith said no single society was responsible for the movement, and that the Anti-Saloon League was not officially represented in the conference. Active support has been given, he said, by the Federal Council of Churches.

"More than 850 delegates, representing all the religious and political faiths, will participate in the first conference," he explained, adding that they would bring to Washington "the moral force of the nation" in the hope of stirring the country to the need of law observance.

A long list of speakers has been announced for the conference, including William J. Bryan, Governor Pinchot of Pennsylvania, Senator Borah of Idaho, former Governor Milliken of Maine, and many others prominent in church and civic life.

SEEKS AID OF GOVERNORS.

Coolidge to Confer With State Executives on Oct. 20.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 12.—The conference between President Coolidge and Governors of States to discuss methods of insuring closer co-operation between the national and State Governments, particularly in the enforcement of the Eighteenth Amendment and the Volstead act, will meet at the White House on Oct. 20, immediately following the annual conference of Governors to be held at West Baden, Ind.

It was said at the White House today that President Coolidge expected that most of the thirty Governors who will attend the West Baden meeting and perhaps some others would accept his invitation.

The President's conference, it was stated, will be preceded by a luncheon, with Mrs. Coolidge as host. Afterwards the President, the Secretaries of the Treasury and Labor and officials of their departments will discuss the proposals to be advanced by Mr. Coolidge—Federal and State co-operation to bring about better enforcement of the laws relating to the sale of alcoholic beverages and narcotics and matters relating to immigration.

The purpose of the conference, according to the White House explanation, is not to devise any legislative program for submission to Congress or State Legislatures. The measures contemplated relate to executive enforcement of existing laws.

HILL HAS VISIONS OF BEING PRESIDENT

Thinks He Might Win as Wet Candidate if Thrown Out of Congress.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Md., Oct. 12.—"If the drys throw me out of Congress they will make me the first wet President of the United States," was Representative John Phillip Hill's comment today on reports that drys in the House were planning to ask his removal on the ground that he had deliberately violated the Volstead act.

"But I am afraid," Mr. Hill added, "that they will not attempt to do so."

"I was very obnoxious to the drys in Congress during the last session," he went on. "I also, when I was elected, held a commission in the Officers' Reserve Corps. One prominent dry introduced a resolution to fire out of Congress all members of the Officers' Reserve Corps, on the theory that this was an office of profit under the Constitution, and that a Congressman was disqualified by reason of the obligation to fight in time of war. That resolution was aimed by the drys at me. I refused to resign from the Officers' Reserve Corps and I have just accepted another commission in it, and I have remained a member of Congress and have not yet been thrown out."

Mr. Hill today explained his move in asking that Judge J. J. Britt, counsel for the prohibition unit, be given an opportunity to aid him in his defense against the injunction proceedings instituted yesterday in the United States District Court by United States Attorney Amos W. W. Woodcock.

"I called Commissioner Haynes's attention to the definition of one-half of 1 per cent. of alcohol in the Volstead act," said Mr. Hill, "and Haynes said that it was the intent of Congress to exempt cider and fruit juices from the Volstead act, and that no limit had been set.

"I then proceeded to make homemade fruit juices, and now I have been enjoined from permitting them to contain more than one-half of 1 per cent."

Hangs Himself in a Cell.

A man describing himself as Edward Berger, of 305 Washington Street, Hoboken, arrested in a Broad Street department store in Newark charged with shoplifting and said by the police to have resembled a murderer sought by the Hoboken authorities, hanged himself yesterday in a cell at police headquarters, Newark. A note signed "Ernest Behr," and addressed to "Adolph Scheffman, 22-24 North William Street," was found in the cell. It requested Scheffman to "send my body to Germany for burial."

VISITING SCOTSMAN WON'T DRINK HERE

Dr. Gerald Leighton Says Guest Should Not Violate Country's Laws.

LONDON LIKES COCKTAILS

Food Expert Says Vogue of the Martini and Manhattan Is Spreading.

Dr. Gerald Leighton, O. B. E., M. D., F. R. S. E., who has been representing Scotland at the World's Dairy Congress, just adjourned in Syracuse, has made himself conspicuous here, by consistently declining, although he is not a teetotaller, the alcoholic hospitality of his hosts in this country.

"I have constantly declined to take drinks that were offered to me by my American friends," said Dr. Leighton yesterday at the Waldorf, "because I don't intend to violate the law of the United States while I'm its guest."

"But you have no idea," he added, "how the English people are taking up American drinks. They are strong for Manhattan cocktails and they also appreciate a Martini. Americans visiting England have brought over the use of formulae for drinks which they are unable to get at home. At first American drinks were served at only a few of the leading London hotels, but they soon became popular and you are able to get them almost anywhere in England and Scotland."

When asked for his opinion of the effects of prohibition, Dr. Leighton parried the question. "I think prohibition is one of the greatest experiments in sociology that has been tried since the beginning of the world," he replied.

Dr. Leighton is the medical officer in charge of the Food Department of the Scottish Board of Health. His visit to the United States was to inform him at first hand of American methods of milk distribution in large cities, and of American methods of food canning and meat packing. He is the author of a recent book on "Botulism and Food Preservation," in recognition of which he received an honorary degree from Syracuse University. He has been invited to lecture on botulism at the University of Chicago and leaves for there on Monday.

"What impresses me most here," he said, "is the apparently endless wealth of the people of the United States. There seems to be no end of the amount of money they can spend. Everywhere I see people plentifully supplied with money. As I told a friend in Syracuse, there's everything you can buy for a dollar but few things you can buy for less than a dollar."

LAWYERS GO ON STRIKE.

Sicilian Attorneys Protest Against Tax on Profession.

PALERMO, Sicily, Oct. 12.—The lawyers of Caltanissetta are on strike, and no cases are being heard before the Prefectural or other courts because of the lack of counsel.

The lawyers protested against the taxation imposed upon them for the exercise of their profession and went on strike when satisfaction was refused by Royal Commissioner Mazi.

"The package I carry to Cuba"

ON my visits to the tobacco fields I always take along several boxes of La Palina cigars. I began this practice when I first went to Cuba to buy tobacco. It was intended only as a courtesy to my friends there. But I soon found that the smoking of a La Palina was a treat to these men, for in their country there is no cigar like it.

It is not possible to make, in Cuba, a cigar of the quality of La Palina at a price within reason. The import duty charged by that country on tobacco of the quality I use as wrapper, alone is so great that it prohibits the manufacture of La Palina.

The fact that they cannot buy, in Cuba, a cigar made of the fine tobaccos contained in La Palina is not the only reason prominent Cuban tobacco men prefer it. They find in La Palina a mild, full-bodied flavor contained in no other cigar, and which is the same each year. It is gratifying to me to see that the opinion of these expert judges of tobacco quality is shared, in this country, by so many men whose only requirement of a cigar is that it shall please their taste.

BRIDE OF TEN DAYS QUITS HER HUSBAND

Found He Was an Ironworker Out of a Job Instead of a Manufacturer.

RAN AWAY TO BUFFALO

Moved by His Tale of Loneliness, 18-Year-Old Stenographer Married in Haste.

After ten days of married life, which began with a runaway wedding with a man she "had never considered as a possible husband," Mrs. William McKinley Weller, formerly Miss Stephene Tichy, 18 years old, returned yesterday to her parents' home at 1,838 Woodhaven Avenue, Woodhaven, Queens. She was accompanied by her mother and her sister, Miss Bertha Tichy, and came from Cleveland. She had summarily departed during her husband's absence from the hotel.

"I soon learned that he was not an iron manufacturer but an iron worker, and out of employment, at that," she declared. "I don't know where he is now, but I will soon find out and sue for dissolution of the marriage.

Weller's pathetic, tearful declarations before the marriage that he was misunderstood and lonesome and that he loved her deeply aroused her sympathies, Mrs. Weller said, and, without making any preparations she went with him on the first available train to Buffalo. That was on Oct. 2.

Mrs. Weller, who was a stenographer in Manhattan, was walking along Broadway near her downtown office, she related, when she encountered Weller that day.

"I'd seen him occasionally when he used to live here in Woodhaven," she said, "but never during the five years I knew him did I consider him as a possible husband. He asked me to take a taxicab ride with him, and I consented. In the machine he broke down and cried, declaring that no one understood him, that his life was unbearably lonesome and that only I could help him. Protesting his love, he urged me to elope with him immediately.

"What he told me touched me, and I consented to go with him. I had little money and, without even stopping to go home and pack a grip, we went to the Grand Central Station where he bought tickets for Buffalo. We took the first train we could get, but arrived in Buffalo so late that night that we were unable to secure a marriage license. We engaged separate rooms at a hotel, and the ceremony was performed the next morning by a Justice of the Peace."

The days following, Mrs. Weller said, were spent at Niagara Falls, Pittsburgh and Cleveland.

"Before the end of the second day I began to regret what I had done," she said. "He refused to give me money for really necessary clothes, and I soon learned that he was not an iron manufacturer, but an ironworker out of employment. I decided right then and there that this was no life for me, so soon after we reached Cleveland I telegraphed mother to come and take me home. The next day, yesterday, my mother and sister arrived. Will was out for a walk, and we left the hotel before he returned. I have neither seen nor heard from him since. Where he lived also is unknown to me. We didn't leave any message for him at the hotel, either."

TO DISCUSS WATER POWER.

Public Service Officials Called to Meet by Secretary Hoover.

Removal of obstacles that are checking the widest development of power production and distribution will be discussed this afternoon at a conference in the United Engineers' Building, called by Secretary of Commerce Herbert Hoover with the approval of President Coolidge.

Upon invitation of Secretary Hoover, the Chairmen of the Public Service Commissions in the Northeastern States will discuss preliminary steps that may be taken for the public interest by Federal and State authorities in the promotion of super-power development in the New England and Middle Atlantic States. Members of the Federal Commission who investigated the matter several years ago will also attend.

The aim of the conference is a more effective and co-ordinated power production between public authorities and industries in the interest of the public.

YONKERS NOT DRY YET.

Five Prisoners Charged With Drunkenness After Raid.

Only two days after a big force of Federal Prohibition enforcement agents made wholesale arrests which they believed "dry-cleaned" Yonkers, liquor again flowed so freely that five out of six prisoners arraigned in Yonkers City Court yesterday were charged with intoxication.

Simon Mulqueen of 110 Ash Street, Yonkers, took the pledge and was released to go after his wife, Mrs. Mary Mulqueen, prosecuted him. James Lundergan and Patrick Storey, who gave their address as 20 South Street, New York City, got suspended sentences because a steamship on which they are employed was about to sail. As the other two were also first offenders, Judge Charles W. Boote was lenient with them in view of the fact that they were locked up over night.

DEATH FREES A SPEEDER.

Judge Holds Driver Warranted in Fast Run to Bedside.

A charge of speeding against Alfonse Fraser of Bedford Hills in Yonkers City Court yesterday resulted in leniency for the defendant because it was shown that a passenger in his car was racing with death.

Judge Charles W. Boote was informed by Patrolman Aaron Martin that the defendant operated an automobile thirty-four miles an hour on Saw Mill River Road in Yonkers, or eleven miles more than the speed limit there.

The defendant told the Judge that in the car was a relative of Mrs. S. A. Merrill of 850 Park Avenue, New York City, who was hurrying to see her because she was ill. The Judge said he had been informed that the woman had since died. In view of the circumstances, he felt speeding was justified and suspended sentence.

C. F. Slater is Chairman of the Show Committee. The exhibition will last one week. It is promoted by the Flatbush Automobile Dealers' Association.

THE SPECTATOR

A London Review for American Readers

THE Spectator has for many years voiced the opinions of cultured Englishmen. When an American reads The Spectator he is listening to the voices of Englishmen who think and who are capable of speaking without the bitterness of prejudice. In internal politics it is disposed toward conservatism; internationally it supports any policy which will further the cause of peace. It has a deep, though not uncritical, respect for America.

For nearly 100 years it has appealed mainly to the squirearchy of England, devoting much space to the liberal arts and every modern poet has published work in its columns. In the letters from its readers, Americans will find John Bull thinking aloud. Wise or dense, witty or prim, displaying exquisite scholarship or indignant bewilderment, The Spectator's letters represent a whole side of English life with complete and spontaneous freshness.

TOOTH PROVES APES LIVED IN NEBRASKA

Finding of Giant Native Camel's Skull Also Announced by Natural History Museum.

FOSSIL RICHES IN QUARRY

Bones of Little Rhinoceros, Giant Pig, Clawed Ungulate and Three-Toed Horse Unearthed.

A tooth of a native ape, the only one known to the new world, and the skull and jaws of a monster prehistoric camel have been discovered by the Albert Thompson expedition in Nebraska. The announcement was made yesterday by Professor W. D. Matthew, curator of the department of vertebrate palaeontology of the American Natural History Museum.

In addition to these discoveries, the Thompson expedition, when it arrives in New York next Friday, will assemble specimens, which, according to Professor Matthew, will form one of the richest collections in the world. It will include the skull and bones of three-toed horses, the fossil remains of the little rhinoceros, the giant pig, and the moropus, or clawed ungulate, all contemporary animals belonging to the Lower Miocene period. The bones of these animals may have lain buried from 2,000,000 to 20,000,000 years.

The great camel is attributed by Professor Matthew to the Pliocene period, from 1,000,000 to 1,500,000 years ago. The prehistoric camel was one-fifth as large again as the modern desert camel and weighed a third more. Otherwise, said Professor Matthew, they corresponded in every respect to the modern Bactrian camel and disappeared from this continent about the glacial period, probably to seek warmer climates.

Ape Period in Doubt.

The ape tooth Professor Matthew regards as an even more important discovery, since, he declares, it shows that apes were at one time inhabitants of America. Professor Matthew is unable to say what period the tooth belongs to without a close examination. He does not think it belongs to the Miocene Age, the missing link period between ape and mankind, nor does he believe it will afford evidence which will alter his conviction that this continent was not inhabited by primitive man.

"Mr. Thompson, who is now on his way back to New York after six months of excavation work in the Snake Creek fossil quarries in Western Nebraska, has already shipped this museum eleven cases of fossils and bones of prehistoric monsters," said Professor Matthew yesterday. "The specimens are being unpacked and classified at the museum, awaiting his return.

"This is the sixth year the American Natural History Museum has worked the Nebraska quarries, which have yielded countless thousands of bones belonging to more than 150 species of animals, the great majority of which were thought to have existed only in prehistoric days in Europe, Asia and Africa.

Quarries Rich in Fossils.

"The Nebraska quarries are probably the most extraordinary of their kind in the world, and have proved to be veritable gold mines. They were discovered in 1677 by James H. Cook, an old Indian scout and plainsman, who was then the proprietor of a large cattle ranch at Agate, at present owned by his son, Harold Cook. The quarry occupies two small hills on the Cook ranch, not far from the Niobrara river. Running through these hills is a rich layer of fossil deposit two feet thick, containing thousands of ancient bones.

"The Nebraska State Geologist in the early '90s made a survey of the quarry, and the first large fossil collection was taken from it by the Carnegie Museum at Pittsburgh. Later, New York's Museum began to work the quarry and obtained a considerable fossil collection. The quarry, however, is so rich in deposits that these operations barely scratched its sides, and the greater part of the buried treasures today remain untouched.

"The Museum workers from time to time open up other cuts which they hope will yield the ancient mammal specimens they covet. Few have any idea of the vast amount of work and care which is entailed in planning and carrying through an expedition which seeks the remains of these ancient beasts in the hope the remains will shed additional light on the dim and distant evolutionary periods of an early world.

Hundreds of "Little Rhinoceri."

"The little rhinoceros, which forms part of the Museum's collection, was about the size of a half-grown calf and had two horns side by side at the front of the skull, instead of a single one, or of a pair one behind the other. His remains are most abundant in the quarry and hundreds of skulls have been taken out by the Carnegie, the American and other institutions. The Museum, as it collects from year to year further remains of the little rhinoceros, has the materials now for one or more almost complete skeletons. The animal was known to have roamed over Europe and Asia in its day.

"The giant pig was about the same size as the modern rhinoceros. Little is known of its habits, except that it possessed sharp, powerful teeth, and was well equipped to attack and bite his enemies. Some say he was carnivorous, others that he was a vegetarian. It is probable that he lived on vegetable food, nuts, roots and tubers. He roamed all over the northern world.

"The moropus belonged to the ungulates. He is peculiar in many respects. Especially in his long neck and small head, suggesting a horse, and his deep body and rounded back, suggesting a tapir. His long, stilted legs are suggestive of a giraffe, while his feet are most like a rhinoceros, except that they have great claws instead of hoofs.

Clawed Ungulate a Rarity.

"This animal is extremely rare except in the Nebraska quarries. Although his remains have been found in Europe, they have generally been in fragments. A part of a skeleton has been found in France, in China and in India, but re where in the Old World have his remains been found in such abundance as in Nebraska. In the last three or four years several of his skeletons have been taken from the quarry and are on exhibition in various institutions throughout the country.

"Scientists are at a loss to account for the remains of these three animals only in the quarry and for the great abundance of their bones there. Various theories have been brought forward to account for the enormous assemblage of their remains and nothing else. In all probability when these animals roamed the continent the quarry was part of a channel of a stream. One theory is that these beasts venturing too far into the stream got caught in an eddy or strong currents and were thus carried to their death.

"There is another theory that coming to the stream to drink they were caught in quicksands. This might explain why the remains of smaller animals are not found with them, since these could drink from the edge of the waters, while the larger animals were forced to walk into the centre of the stream to quench their thirst."

Of the habits of the ancient beasts Professor Matthew said little was known. That they filled some useful part in the far distant animal age in which they lived and that they inhabited the New World as well as the Old is shown by the many bones buried in ancient sandstone. He says that it remains to be seen whether further quest will throw any additional light on their origin.

FIRETRAP DANGER LAID TO BUILDERS

Architects Also Censured by Speaker at Prevention Congress for Recklessness.

METAL LATH ADVOCATED

Progress Made in Factory Designs —Fire-Sprinkler Records Given.

Apartment or residence buildings with lumber joists, studs and ordinary lath were described as firetraps of the worst kind yesterday by Wharton Clay, Chicago architect, at the International Fire Prevention Congress at the Seventy-first Regiment Armory in connection with Fire Prevention Week.

"If an architect and engineer and a criminal incendiary should get their heads together," said Mr. Clay, "they could hardly devise a better construction for rapid destruction by fire than the present apartment or residence building with lumber joists, studs and ordinary lath. Even the plaster, which is incombustible itself and would be considered a fire protection of high order, aids in making a series of chimneys to aid in the draft, and when this plaster is installed, as is customary, the entire interior of the chimney is lined with small pieces of rough wood easily ignited and which communicate a fire with incredible speed throughout the structure.

"This does not mean that lumber must be eliminated to make houses fire-safe, but to make them fire-safe the lumber must be protected in a manner different from the present custom, and the myriad of small pieces of wood must be eliminated."

The speaker then described metal lath and other materials of fire-resisting qualities which might be used advantageously in the construction of residential buildings in which lumber could then be used without increasing the risk.

W. O. Ludlow, architect, of Ludlow & Peabody, said there was no excuse for an architect to design a building of flimsy construction simply because the owner or "purse-holder" demanded such construction as a money-saving proposition.

Mr. Ludlow said that he had "found the average architect guilty of woeful lack of interest in the methods of fire prevention." He called upon every architect to consider how he could do his part in fire prevention to the fullest in drawing his building designs.

Edward A. Barrier of Boston, assistant Chief Engineer of the inspection department of the Associated Factory Mutual Fire Insurance Companies, said that great progress had been made in the last two decades in the use of fire-resisting materials in factory construction. He then said:

"It must be concluded, therefore, that modern fire protection as practiced in safeguarding factory properties pays, and if the general public could be brought to a realization of this, as have the more progressive factory owners, the present tremendous fire waste, running into hundreds of millions, could be greatly reduced.

There are approximately 50,000 properties equipped with automatic sprinkler systems in the United States, according to Henry A. Flake, manager of the inspection and service department of the Grinnell company of Providence.

"The twenty-two year record of the National Fire Protection Association includes 28,814 fires in sprinklered plants where heat was sufficient to operate the sprinklers," he said. "Of these fires, 19,007 were practically or entirely extinguished by the sprinklers, this being 66 per cent. of the total number. In 8,953 fires, or 29.7 per cent. of the cases, the sprinklers held the fire in check so that it was extinguished with the aid of other apparatus, such as pails, chemical extinguishers or hose streams. In 1,224 fires, or 4.3 per cent. of the total number, the fire was not controlled by the sprinklers. Many of these unsatisfactory fires were in extra hazardous properties and in a large number of cases the sprinkler system was incomplete, obsolete or defective.

Wall Street and the financial district, according to George W. Booth, Chief Engineer for the National Board of Fire Underwriters, represent the highest type of safety construction in buildings in New York City. The elimination of fire risks in building construction was traced by Mr. Booth back for 12 years to the time of the disastrous Equitable Building fire. At that time the Underwriters' engineer said it was discovered that York City had a "black block," by which he means a block of old and inflammable buildings where the danger of conflagration was greater than anywhere else in the entire city.

With last night's session the International Fire Prevention Congress was brought to a close.

20,000 TONS OF COAL BURN.

Four-Alarm Fire Threatens Long Island City Gas Tanks.

Four alarms were turned in early yesterday for a fire which started in the coal bunkers of the East River Gas Company, a subsidiary of the New Amsterdam Gas Company, at Webster Avenue, between the East River and Vernon Avenue, Long Island City. The origin of the fire is not known and for two hours several large gas tanks less than a block distant were in danger.

Workmen discovered the flames, which spread to a boiler near the bunkers, which exploded. The workmen detached a pipe line conveying tar oil to the gas tanks, thus probably averting serious explosions. The first firemen to arrive realized the danger and second, third and fourth alarms were sent in. Deputy Fire Chief John F. O'Hara arrived in response to the second alarm and took charge.

The fire started shortly before 3 A. M., and it was after 5 before it was brought under control. Firemen from fifteen engine companies and the fireboats John P. Hylan and Peter McClellan fought the blaze. More than 20,000 tons of coal stored in the pockets were burned.

Reserves from the Astoria and Long Island City precincts were called out because of the large crowd which collected. The flames were visible for miles around.

"Judge" Barklow of Jersey City still gives the verdict to Bond Bread

Here is what Mrs. B. R. Barklow 192 Arlington Ave., Jersey City, recently remarked:—

"I am pleased to say that I was one of the Committee of Judges who in 1918 picked out the best home-made loaves from among all those from which Bond Bread was designed. I have used Bond Bread ever since and have yet to find a better. I would cheerfully recommend it to anyone."

Knowing What's Right And Sticking to it

A Sheffield principle that has made Sheffield Milk the World's Standard of Safety and Quality. Read this and think it over seriously.

BY "knowing what's right" we mean knowing the right methods by which your milk supply can be made absolutely safe. By "stieking to it" we mean that in the face of what have seemed, to some, insurmountable obstacles, we have stuck to what we knew to be right, thereby giving to Sheffield Milk an added value we believe you can get in no other milk supply.

This refers to Pasteurization. It is nearly twenty years now since the Sheffield Farms Co. introduced and perfected the method now employed in pasteurizing Sheffield Milk. These methods were determined by the highest scientific authorities in the country. The experiments were conducted in a Sheffield plant and the results of these experiments have been accepted as conclusive and authoritative by the U. S. Public Health Service, The Dairy Division of the U. S. Department of Agriculture, the British Ministry of Health and the National Commission on Milk Standards.

The method of Pasteurization accepted by these bodies consists in heating milk to 145 degrees F. and holding it at that temperature for not less than 30 minutes, this to be followed by immediate cooling. Everybody agreed on this method, but not everyone agreed that these conditions could be met.

There were difficulties of sufficient gravity to invite skimping of temperature or duration. Milk developed a cooked taste or the cream line disappeared at times when complete pasteurization was attempted.

And now we are confronted by some new "discoveries" that strike at the very foundations of milk safety. Somebody has found that a few degrees less of heat, a few degrees less than 145° F. will cause an inflation of the cream volume and make milk appear to contain more cream than it really does. You will probably get from time to time, bits of propaganda on this from interested sources, but you may rest assured that every drop of Sheffield Milk will be pasteurized in the same efficient way that has made the Sheffield label a mark of assured safety and quality.

BELIEVE BLACKMAIL DROVE MAYOR TO DIE

Officials of Irvington, N. J., Now Think Death of E. R. Folsom Was a Suicide.

HARPIES KNEW OF HIS PAST

Boyhood Prison Term Was Used to Impoverish Town's Leading Citizen.

The mystery of the death of Mayor Edwa d Folsom of Irvington, N. J., on Sept. 25 last was cleared up yesterday when the authorities decided that he had killed himself as the only means of escaping blackmailers who had extorted money from him in the six years of his service as Chief Executive of Irvington because it was alleged that he had served a prison term in New York State thirty years ago on his conviction, at 18, for forgery.

Folsom was considered the foremost citizen of Irvington when he died of an overdose of a sedativ in the living room of his home at 142 Orange Avenue. The circumstances of his death, however, caused neighbors to ask Prosecutor John O. Bigelow of Essex County to begin an investigation. It was the general impression that the Mayor was a wealthy man, but when, on the filing of his estate, it was discovered that he left little money, his friends became convinced that his death was not accidental, as at first believed, and that there was a hidden motiv for his killing himself.

A Long Hidden Past.

Within the last few days information reached the authorities that Folsom had a past which he had succeeded in concealing from his most intimate friends in Irvington during all the years of his residence there. This clue led them to make inquiries of the police of Hammondsport, N. Y., where he was born. It was alleged yesterday that the Hammondsport police sent a communication to the Essex County authorities the next day revealing that Edward E. Folsom, a native of that place, according to their records, was convicted there on a forgery charge thirty years ago and sentenced to ten years in Auburn Prison. Governor Theodore Roosevelt, the records also were alleged to have shown, pardoned Folsom three years later through the efforts of a wealthy merchant in Hammondsport, whose daughter was in love with the convict.

The investigation by Prosecutor Bigelow also developed that although Folsom was the President of the Irvington-Hilton Coal Company, during the past year he had borrowed a considerable sum of money from the firm, which went into involuntary bankruptcy a few days after his death.

Paid $25,000 in a Year.

It was reported in Irvington yesterday that information also had reached the authorities that within the last year Folsom had paid more than $25,000 to a band of blackmailers who had threatened him for years with exposure of his criminal past if he did not comply with their demands.

It also was reported that a short time before his death two women city employes in Irvington, who evidently had heard reports of his past from some of the blackmailers, had threatened to reveal him as pardoned convict if he did not aid them to obtain a raise in salary.

Prosecutor Bigelow would not make any comments on these reports yesterday, but admitted that he had not closed his investigation of the death of Mayor Folsom.

Facts in Concise Form to Help Contestants

Southern California of all the great markets in the United States is the most sharply defined—bounded by Mexico on south, Pacific Ocean on west, mountains on north, deserts on east; differentiated by its semi-tropical climate, special crops and industries; served by a single great wholesale center.

The Los Angeles Times is the only big morning newspaper whose ownership is IN Southern California; whose principal features and all its supplementary parts and magazines are written exclusively FOR Southern California; and whose circulation extends THROUGHOUT and is almost wholly contained WITHIN Southern California.

Continuously for several years, in good times and bad, the Los Angeles Times has rated among the first four or five American newspapers in volume of advertising, taking the lead as the largest medium in the world in 1921, which position it has held ever since. Whatever may be the causes back of The Times supremacy in Southern California, these causes are fundamental and time-tested.

PLEASE SAVE WATER

The unusually low rainfall during the past nine months, which has been 33% below normal, has resulted in water shortages throughout the Eastern States.

Even our reserve supply in storage has been reduced to a minimum beyond which it is not safe to go.

We are, therefore, compelled to notify our consumers that it will be necessary for them to exercise the utmost economy in the use of water in order to avert the serious consequences of a water famine.

Unless consumers commence at once to co-operate with the Company in conserving the supply it will be necessary within a few days to discontinue service for a portion of each day.

Construction work in progress last winter, which it was impossible on account of the early drought to complete in time to store the ordinary Spring rains, is now complete and will be available for storage purposes during the ensuing year, thus protecting the supply against future shortage.

Please, therefore, save water in every possible way until abundant rain falls, and ask your neighbors to do the same. We explain the situation thus frankly to all, knowing that you will appreciate it and loyally help in this community problem.

Failure to Sacrifice Broke Up Rally in Fourth Inning and Was the Turning Point.

BOB MEUSEL IS BLAMED

Ignored Huggins's Order and Double Play Resulted, Analysis of Third Game Reveals.

NEHF IS HERO ON DEFENSE

Successfully Met Every Shift in Opposing Team's System—Giants Made No Mistakes and Won.

The Yankees spurned a chance to make one run yesterday and lost, 1 to 0. That solitary marker came back in the hands of the Giants in the seventh inning to haunt the American League team for the remainder of the game. The Giants won because they did not despise little things. The losers made only one grievous mistake, but the winners made none, and in that margin lay the difference between defeat and victory.

Had Big Bob Meusel been content to bunt in the fourth inning there might have been a different story to tell this morning. This time the blame does not rest with Huggins. Whatever the little manager's shortcomings he does know baseball and he specifically told Meusel to lay one down.

Dugan was on second and Ruth on first, and there was no one out. A roller down the first base line would have been almost sure to advance both runners. Pipp and Ward, both good hitters in this series, were coming up and with runners on second and third even a long sacrifice fly would have resulted in a score. But Meusel thought he knew more than his manager. He not only failed to bunt, which was the right thing to do, but he did the worst possible thing. He hit at the first ball Nehf offered him and a lightning double play resulted.

Now Nehf was faltering in this inning. The only time that he did falter during the nine. If Meusel was determined to hit he should have, at least, made Nehf work some first, instead of hitting the first pitch and one that was none too good at that.

As the thing turned out Ward singled in his next turn at bat, which, unfortunately for the Yankees, was in the following inning and if Meusel had obeyed instructions this hit would probably have changed the entire aspect of the game.

This is not a case of second guessing. There was only one logical play at this juncture and Huggins saw it and so did every spectator well versed in the game of baseball. It is not true, as some may have been led to believe, that Huggins does everything wrong. He is not a great leader, it is true, but he is a close student of the sport in which he is engaged. His mistakes are psychological rather than otherwise. He is slow to grasp opportunity at times, but he is not lacking in knowledge of the fundamentals of the game. He made no mistakes in handling his batters against Nehf's pitching yesterday.

Yankees Shift Tactics.

Time after time the Yankees suddenly shifted their tactics at bat and that their efforts were not crowned with success was due to the great work of the Giants' lowman, rather than to any shortcomings of the system. McGraw had Nehf working the corners all afternoon and this frequently got the left-hander into trouble. That is, there were any number of Yankee hitters who worked the ball to three balls and no strikes, or two balls and no strikes before Nehf would put one over. This led Huggins to believe that Nehf was a little short of control and through the early innings the Yankees were waiting patiently for passes which never materialized.

When he realized that Nehf's control was imperfect he could be blamed, and he realized it promptly enough. Huggins faced about and sent the Yankee sluggers up to hit the first one. This change of front occurred in the fourth inning, which has already been mentioned, and for a moment it threatened to break the tight hold Nehf had on the game. Dugan, first up, doubled off the opening pitch. Ruth could not hit the first pitch, or any other for Nehf kept the ball too far away from him. Meusel hit the first one, in his case a mistake, and so likewise did Pipp.

In the fifth the Yankees tried the waiting game again. Ward worked the call to three balls and two strikes and then, as the slang of the games goes, "jumped on the cripple" for a single. Once more Huggins put his reliance in the sacrifice, but it failed, because Schang had so much difficulty in bunting that the Giants were tipped off and were lying in wait for just that play. Both Groh and Kelly were racing up the baselines toward the plate when Wally finally succeeded in meeting the ball and all Groh had to do was to pounce on the ball and toss to Bancroft for the force play at second. Scott followed with a single off Nehf's glove, Bancroft attempting a sharp play on Schang at second but failing. The Yankees were threatening again, but their old nemesis, the double play, bobbed up to halt them. Jones hit squarely at Frisch, who tossed to Bancroft for the force-out, while Bancroft's relay easily beat the Yankee pitcher to first.

Nehf Well Directed.

If Huggins's handling of his batters was good, McGraw's efforts with Nehf were superb. The left-hander had every thing—speed, a sweeping curve, change of pace and control—and under his manager's guidance he employed all these assets to their greatest advantage. There is no question but that McGraw has decided that walking Ruth in emergencies is the better part of valor. The Babe got only two bases on balls out of four trips to the plate, but the other two times he came up with two out and nobody on.

The theory was advanced that the two passes were not intentional, but a close study of them disproves this. The first one came on four pitched balls and the second on five. The single strike occurred when Ruth got desperate and rushed out in front of the plate to swing at one and miss it a mile. This also would have been a ball, so, as a matter of fact, Nehf threw nine straight bad ones to Babe in the course of the two passes. At no other time did he show any such lamentable lack of control, and it is wholly unlikely that he just happened to be wild on these two occasions. His wild pitches, the protest to Umpire Nallin's calling of a ball on one occasion, but it was a perfunctory kick, made, in all probability, for the purpose of camouflage.

Nehf looks as if McGraw was retiring before Ruth's assault at last. The Little Napoleon is too great a general not to know when to retreat. He will not surrender to the Babe, be sure of that, but neither will he feed his pitchers into the cannon's mouth out of sheer bravado.

Nehf was a great pitcher yesterday, but he was not the only one in the Yankee Stadium. Sad Sam Jones also pitched an almost perfect game of baseball. Eliminate that home run of Stengel's and Jones would have emerged the victor, and into darkness. From the point of statistics Jones was even the superior of his opponent. His allowance was four hits, while Nehf's was six, but one of the four off Jones was that long crash into the bleachers that decided the issue.

Contrast in Homers.

While this hit by Stengel was just as important as the one he made on Wednesday, ther was not the same thrill to it. Wednesday's homer was inside the park and the ancient Casey had to race the ball back home. There was doubt about its being a home run until Stengel was clear across the plate. The thrill was prolonged throughout the time that Casey was making his tortuous progress around the bases, but yesterday it was over just as soon as the ball cleared the low fence that hems the bleachers. There was no interest in Stengel's elated parade around the paths. It was a walkover where the previous time it had been a race. Every one in the great throng knew it was a homer just as soon as he saw Babe Ruth make that futile, almost pitiful, gesture as if to pull the ball back.

It seemed that Jones had a premonition that Stengel was going to make trouble for him. He pitched with exceptional caution to the veteran all afternoon. In the fifth he tried so hard to make Casey bite at a ball once that he ended up by walking him to start the inning. He had also pitched two balls out of three when the blow fell in the seventh. It is worth mentioning that Stengel hit his homer on a pitch that was the exact opposite of the one that he drove so far on Wednesday.

It is impossible to be absolutely sure of these things from a seat in the stands, but it looked as if the hit off Sunk was made on a curve ball on the outside of the plate, while the one off Jones came on a fast ball inside. Thus it would appear that Jones, far from giving Stengel a ball that he might be expected to like and drive out of the park, did the exact opposite and that this was an instance in which an excellent piece of judgment simply went wrong.

The Yanks' Last Stand.

The Yankees made a great fuss in the ninth when Nallin called Ward out on strikes, alleging that Catcher Snyder had tipped Ward's bat. Whether Huggins and his men really believed this is open to doubt. It might well have been only a ruse to allow Nehf to get nervous and cool off.

Such things are not unknown in baseball, and the trick has often been employed with much success. This might have been the last card in Huggins's hand. If so, it was not a trump. When Pipp was hurt in the seventh and there was a delay in resuming the game Nehf came back cold, and Schang, the first batter he had to face, hit safely, but history did not repeat itself in the ninth. Again it was Schang at the bat when play was resumed, but this time he grounded to Groh and the ball game was over. If Snyder really interfered with Ward's bat, which is not likely, it would be the first time that he was ever guilty of the act in his career as a catcher. At least no player on an opposing team has ever charged him with it in the past, and even if it was a trick of his he could not be likely to try it in a situation which was no more critical than that which existed at the time. There was already one out, no one was on base and Nehf was working like a well-oiled machine. Consequently, Nallin's decision is not guilty on the charges brought by Ward and Huggins had the appearance of being just.

That the Giants had lost none of their confidence and dash through their defeat of the preceding day was patent from their beginning of the game. They played with snap and precision, Groh, in particular being a mighty bulwark behind Nehf on the defense. The irrepressible Heinie, who is rated as one of the greatest "money players" in baseball, must have seen a big check coming his way with every ball, for his clutch was deadly. Some of his stops and throws to second were almost on a par with the tricks of black magic that the Giants' infield performed in its opening contest. He was falling down at times as much as usual, but he always did it in front of the hit and when he came up the ball was always in his hands. On one occasion he didn't have to get up at all, but simply scramble over to third on hands and knees to make an important force play.

Babe Was Wide Awake.

McGraw could not find any of the opposition napping yesterday, but he never stopped trying. No sooner had Babe Ruth been installed at first in place of Pipp than the leader of the Giants had one of his hitters rolling a bunt down toward first in hopes of catching Ruth asleep at the switch. The ball went foul and Babe was very much awake anyhow. It is a little difficult to make an instant adjustment on a sudden shift from the outfield to the inner defense and so McGraw decided to try the newcomer out.

All these are little things, but they make up the sum total of a ball game and frequently decide its outcome when teams are as evenly matched as the two now playing. Detail cannot be ignored in a one to nothing game. Little mistakes become great ones in such a game as yesterday's. One bad break—the only one in nine long, tense innings—sent the Yankees down to bitter defeat. All their good pitching and playing could not atone for that one mistake.

Outside Meusel's one blunder the game was well-nigh perfect, a contest hard to dissect and analyse. The Giants had the shade that they have always had over the Yankees in the close games. Their superior leadership and team work count heaviest at such times. The champions can play a game that is close to inspired when they have to. They had to yesterday and did.

Right now the best defensive ball team in either league is holding the best offensive team in check, but a break one way or the other is due. Even the Giants cannot go on working miracles forever. After such pitchers games as these have been, a loose contest is due, or the whole history of the game will be defied. The poorer team will probably crack first, but not necessarily so.

Today's game bids fair to be the most crucial of the series and the chances are not great that one run will decide it.

6 OTHER 1 TO 0 GAMES.

Ruth Pitched One of These and Nehf Shut Out Yanks Once Before.

Prior to yesterday's triumph of the Giants over the Yankees only six world's series games since 1903 had ever been won by a 1 to 0 score. The first was recorded on Oct. 13, 1905, when the Giants blanked the Athletics by the margin of a single run. On Oct. 12, 1906, the Cubs defeated the White Sox by the same score and this count was not repeated until Oct. 10, 1914, when the Braves triumphed over the Athletics. The next came on Sept. 5, 1918, with the Red Sox winning from the Cubs, and Babe Ruth doing the pitching for the Sox. The fifth occurred on Oct. 11, 1920, Cleveland beating Brooklyn, and the last 1 to 0 game prior to yesterday's was on Oct. 13, 1921, when Arthur Nehf for the Giants shut out the Yankees the same day. Yesterday's game, then, was the single tally made by a gun.

STENGEL AGAIN HERO OF HIS TEAMMATES

For Second Time in Three Days Ever-Popular Casey Is Clubhouse Idol.

NEHF SHARES IN PRAISE

McGraw Says It Was Great Game and One That Defies Criticism—Groh Not Overlooked.

From Manager John J. McGraw down the line to the club's bat boy, the Giants sang the praises of Casey Stengel and Art Nehf yesterday after the Giants' triumph in the third game of the world's series at the Yankee Stadium. To the veteran Stengel, who, for the second time brought victory to the National Leaguers with his bat, the bulk of the praise went. But to Nehf, McGraw's veteran southpaw, the players gave unstinted praise for his wonderful exhibition in the box. It was a feat in pitching that will take its place in baseball history, according to the Giant players, who to a man congratulated the Terre Haute twirler for his part in giving the Giants the upper hand once again.

McGraw could not find words to express his admiration for Stengel. The Giant manager lauded the terrific drive by Stengel in the seventh inning which gave the Giants the spoils of this great duel between pitchers. But McGraw did not overlook Nehf and Heinie Groh in his selection of individual stars in his team of stars.

"It was a great game, one of those games about which there can be little to say," said McGraw in the clubhouse after the game. "Everything that could be said was said on the field. By that I mean the playing was of a nature which defies criticism, but encouraged admiration. To Stengel goes the credit for winning. His homer was the one big drive in the Giant attack. Casey is one of those players who can drive the ball when he meets it squarely. He met it squarely in the first game and he did the same thing yesterday. The only difference was that he did not have to run himself out for the home run. It was a whale of a wallop. Stengel is going great guns in this series.

Praise for Groh's Work.

"Nehf's pitching, I think, was wonderful. He allowed six hits and issued three bases on balls, but he never was rattled—never even wavered, and the team gave him the support necessary to prevent the Yankees from benefiting from the hits or passes. The most important cog in the defense was Groh. He played a truly sensational defensive game and contributed a couple of spectacular plays which saved us from critical situations. His best play was that stop and throw on Scott's hit grounder in the seventh which killed off Ward at third and stopped a Yankee rally.

"In the eighth Groh made another wonderful play on Dugan's grounder which was traveling toward left field. This play would have resulted in a double play but for the fact that Umpire Hart got in the way of the throw to Kelly from second. But that was just an accident. Hart explained to me after the game that he slipped as he tried to get out of the way.

"Neal came in for a lot of what I consider undeserved criticism when he passed Ruth. The crowd seemed to think he was passing Ruth intentionally, but he wasn't. He has orders to pitch to Ruth and everybody else on the Yankee team. All my pitchers have orders to do the same thing. We're not afraid of the Yankee hitters. Nehf, however, was giving them plenty of curve balls and he treated Ruth as he did the rest—tried to curve him over. That was all right myself when Ruth walked, particularly in the eighth, for it put the tying run on second with Meusel coming to bat, and Meusel is just as dangerous a hitter as Ruth.

Honorable Mention for Jones.

"Jones pitched a good game for the Yankees. It was a tough game for him to lose—a tough game for any pitcher to lose. But if you remember, we were banging him pretty solidly all the way. Young was deprived of a hit in the first inning by Witt's great catch and a good catch by Meusel on his brother's fly in the second spelled what looked like a sure enough hit.

"The umpiring today was better than it has been during the series. You know the umpiring has not been of the best in this series, but there was an improvement in today's game."

In their dressing quarters at the Polo Grounds, where the team went immediately after the game, the Giants were a happy lot. The happiness and good-nature of the athletes undoubtedly was emphasized by the unanimity which characterized the after-the-game scene in the clubhouse on Thursday afternoon. The team, however, did not let its joy over this second victory submerge the fact that the diamond struggle is furnishing a stiff battle. On the contrary, the atmosphere seemed to be one of "We've got them on the run now, let's keep our heads up and keep them on the run."

McGraw said that his pitching selection for tomorrow will probably be Jack Scott. "Scott has not been feeling well for the last few days," he said, "but he told me today that his cold had disappeared and that he felt fine, so I'll probably start him tomorrow."

Incidents in the Game.

Irish Meusel robbed brother Bob of a hit in the first when he backed almost to the wall in deep left for a hard hit fly, and Lanky Bob rubbed brother Emil of a hit when he gathered in Irish's line drive to deep left in the second. That's brotherly love in baseball.

Some of the crowd "booed" Young when he stepped to the plate in the first. They cheered Ward when he made his first appearance with bat in hand in the second. That second-base incident of the second game evidently is fresh in the minds of many.

Ruth's slashing single through the box to centre in the first—the first bark of the Yankee guns—just missed taking the fingers off Nehf's pitching hand. Art reached for the ball, but luckily for the Terre Haute southpaw he missed.

There's a sign at the Stadium which says: "You can't yank 'em out." Ask Watson, McQuillan and Hoyt about that. McGraw and Huggins think differently.

Save for Scott's fumble on Groh's grounder in the first the plays executed by the rival infields flashed like sparkling gems in a choice collection of glass.

How the crowd yelled when Ruth walked in the fourth on four pitched balls, and again in the eighth on five pitched balls. The echoes must have traveled to Terre Haute.

In the second inning Ruth almost cracked the concrete box front in right field when he raced recklessly after a foul from Big George Kelly's bat, which went into the stand. Babe is letting nothing get by or away from him.

Somebody should tell Whitey Witt to lessen the apparent effort in his catches in centre. Yankee supporters in the stands always experience heart thrills when Whitey starts after a fly. It doesn't appear that he will get it, yet he invariably does.

Scott booted Groh's grounder in the first and when he came to bat in the fourth Heinie tried another slash at the Yankee shortstop. But Scottie fooled him and [illegible]

COLUMBUS IS GREAT, BOY FANS DISCOVER

Holiday Commemorating Event in 1492 Leaves Many Free to See a Series Game.

When Columbus discovered America in 1492, as every school child knows, he didn't know that event would provide a holiday that would enable the Great American Boy to see a world's series championship game between the New York Giants and Yankees, but such was the case yesterday. The discovery of America is some event to commemorate in history books, but it doesn't hold a candle to a world's series game to the students thereof. This was exemplified yesterday at the Yankee Stadium when Columbus Day saw 4,000 persons in line at the gates between 6 and 9 o'clock, of which number it was estimated one-third were children released from school by the holiday. Most of them, in 1923 fashion, were prepared to camp for the day, carrying sweaters and lunch baskets.

Twenty-five uniformed women of the New York Chapter of the American Red Cross were stationed in the ramps and collected money for the Japanese Relief Fund. They were there long before the holders of the reserved seat tickets arrived. Virtually every appeal met with a willing response from the fans.

Where is the avowed pessimist whose assertive wail before the series was: "It won't be as big as they think. The crowd won't come. It's just another intra-city series." Maybe there's not the same interest. Maybe. But the crowd going from the stadium disappointed in the quest for tickets was sufficient to prove the popularity of the series.

Nick Altrock and Al Schacht, as usual, had their rally fun and so did the crowd. The pair again put on their burlesque of the Dempsey-Firpo bout and then treated the gathering to some fancy tight-rope walking on the grass in left field.

Some of the Giants already are complaining of pains in their writing arms. Seems everybody wants everything signed. The objects offered for autographs run all the way from a prized baseball fan into the stand, to the margin of a newspaper.

Now you know why they call him "Sad Sam" Jones. It was a tough one for Jones to lose and it was a great game for Nehf to win.

When the band played the "Star-Spangled Banner" just before the game started curious fans had no trouble in locating the ruler-high of the diamond game. Above the thousands who packed the grand stand rose to their feet and uncovered their heads, the gray pate of Commissioner Landis stood out like an iceberg in an ocean.

Outside the enclosure unfortunates who were unable to get tickets packed the sidewalks six and seven deep, while mounted policemen rode back and forth keeping them in order. They were a pathetic lot, so near and yet so far from the classic. One couldn't help but hope that some such break might come as at Shelby, when the gates were thrown open and the swarm was allowed to rush in to see the Dempsey-Gibbons fight free.

They call it the world's series and well they might, for every nationality, race, color and creed was represented there. Bobbed-haired girls, blonds and brunettes, curly haired men, gray-haired men and men with no hair at all; lawyers, doctors, butchers, bakers, newsboys and notables were all there yesterday in the great melting pot.

There is neither kith nor kin in a world's series. The two Meusels, Bob of the Yankees and Emil of the Giants, acted as if they were total strangers when they passed each other every half inning as the teams exchanged places. Walking within a few feet of each other, the brothers went their separate ways without so much as a nod of recognition or a smile.

Heinie Groh tried to distribute souvenirs once too often in the sixth inning. He fouled three balls into the stands to the joy and delight of the fans sitting in the vicinity where the balls dropped, but he became too generous and Dugan caught his next effort near the Yankees' dugout.

Scribes are supposed to be neutral in their sympathies, but up in the press section sat a bespectacled writer who was undoubtedly pro-Giant. Every time Nehf seemed in trouble he eagerly leaned forward as if anxious to go out and help the pitcher with his own throwing arm. He had helped the Giants to win the world's series before, why not again. It was Christy Mathewson.

The roar that greeted Stengel's home run that won the first game was a whisper compared to the howls that echoed and re-echoed across the field after his circuit clout yesterday. And the cheers were repeated by the pennant field bleacher fans when the mighty Casey took his place after the side had been retired.

Bob Meusel must have a huge tailor bill at the end of the season. Whenever the lanky one slides into a base he comes up with a rip in the knee of his pants.

One run didn't seem a very secure advantage for the fans and they stayed in their seats right up to the last out.

The fourth instalment this afternoon. Place, Polo Grounds. Time, 2 o'clock. Lets go!

BABE TO PLAY FIRST UNTIL PIPP RETURNS

Huggins Announces He Will Use Either Smith or Hendrick in Outfield Today.

PRAISES GROH AND NEHF

Takes Defeat Philosophically and Still Expects to Win—Players' Fighting Blood Up.

Wally Pipp, the Yankees' first baseman, may be back in the game before the series is over. This was learned in the clubhouse of the American Leaguers after the game yesterday. Pipp's ankle, injured before the series started, and twisted again yesterday in sliding into second base, was red and swollen. The player appeared to suffer intense pain, but the big first baseman could still walk on it and said that if it did not stiffen up on him last night, he thought he would be able to take his place in the line-up before the championship is decided.

"I'm afraid that Pipp will be unable to play tomorrow and possibly Sunday," Miller Huggins, the midget manager, said, after the game yesterday, "but I hope to have him back at first base next week if the series lasts that long, and we have every intention to make it last until at least Monday afternoon, for we have not finished yet. Today's game was just one of those affairs where the decision goes to the team that gets the run. The Giants got the man across the plate, but it might just as well have been the Yankees. We had plenty of chances to score, but the hits did not come at the right time.

"Heinie Groh was wonderful at third base. I can't be too loud in my praise of the way he cut us off when it looked as though we had runs on two occasions. And Nehf's pitching was the best opposing we had to face in the series, but Jones was just as strong and except for that one drive of Stengel's I believe no would have won out in the long run.

"I haven't made up my mind definitely as to whom I will pitch tomorrow, but it will be Bob Shawkey if he warms up well. If he doesn't I'll send in Hoyt. I expect to start Ruth at first and either Smith or Hendrick will take the Babe's place in the outfield, as I am expecting McGraw to use a right-hander against us.

Players Are Fighting Mad.

"When the boys beat the Giants yesterday it did them a world of good. They got back their confidence and feel that they can win. Their spirit is up and they are fighting mad. Listen to them."

It certainly was not the same quiet, forlorn atmosphere in the dressing rooms of the Yankees as there was after the first of the Giants' victory in the opening game of the series on Wednesday. Yesterday the voices were raised in anger. Nehf for not giving the Babe a good one to hit at in the eighth, Snyder for tipping Ward's bat and preventing him from swinging in the ninth and Groh for cutting off hits by Scott and Dugan, all came in for wrath expressed in no uncertain terms. But the truth of the matter was that the Yanks were more angry at losing the game by the narrow margin of 1 to 0 run than they were at any individual.

Ruth raved in his corner. "They called me out on a bad one and then wouldn't give me a good one to hit at. I was all set to break up that old game in the ninth, but Neal wouldn't get one close enough for me to reach with a broom."

Ward sat on a bench making no move to get dressed. "Snyder held my bat and I couldn't swing at that last one. Right over the groove it was, too. But we'll get them tomorrow. We'll go out there and win it up

PAPYRUS WILL RUN 1 1-2 MILES TODAY

Fast Gallop Takes Lameness Out of English Colt and Hard Drill Is Planned.

JARVIS GREATLY RELIEVED

Trainer Says Horse Is in Much Better Condition—Zev Also May Go Full Distance.

Papyrus, England's representative in the $100,000 international race next Saturday, which came out of his work last Tuesday sore and showed a slight lameness on Thursday before his work of a mile and an eighth, was in much better shape yesterday morning when he came out for his light exercise, and his trainer, Basil Jarvis, was greatly relieved. In addition to his walk Papyrus breezed six furlongs in company with Bar Gold under the close scrutiny of his trainer.

When Jarvis leaned over the rail of the main track at Belmont Park, still watching Papyrus and Bar Gold as they walked slowly toward their stable, his face lighted up and he admitted that he felt much better than on the previous day, when he was manifestly worried over the condition of his charge.

"Papyrus is in much better shape this morning," said the young English expert. "I am glad to say that his work yesterday seems to have benefited him greatly."

There was no trace of the lameness in evidence and it was apparent that he had worked it out to a large extent through his nice gallop of a mile and an eighth on Thursday morning. Dr. Pride-Jones was also in a better frame of mind after noticing the colt's improved condition.

No extensive work was asked of either Papyrus or Zev yesterday morning. Zev went out for a short breeze in the fog of the early morning, but Papyrus was cut longer and later he was asked to do nothing more than a brisk canter with Bar Gold, the pair going about six furlongs. They came out at the usual hour, shortly after 7:30 o'clock, and had the customary walk.

Watch Papyrus Closely.

Both trainer and veterinarian were the closest observers of Papyrus at the walk and canter to gain an exact line on his condition over which they have been so much concerned. The results of their examination were plainly in evidence on their faces when they came back and Jarvis announced that Papyrus was in shape to be stripped this morning for a work over the mile and a half route.

There was only a handful of observers present when Papyrus went out, as it was generally understood that he would do no real work. The fogbank hanging over Long Island was even denser than that of the previous morning, so that many trainers and clockers who do not live in the immediate vicinity of Belmont Park were considerably delayed in motoring to the course. At points it was impossible to proceed faster than the proverbial snail's pace.

Papyrus's work was entirely satisfactory to Trainer Jarvis and the colt, aside from the slight soreness which still persists, is really in better shape than he had hoped to get him in after they came off the ship. Thursday's smart work was most encouraging to the English trainer and after this morning's full trial his next serious step will be made with Donoghue in the saddle, although Papyrus may be asked for a trial on Monday morning to sharpen his speed.

As Donoghue probably will not land until Tuesday night he will be unable to get into action until Wednesday morning. It will be nothing for him to get off the ship at night and ride the next morning. He has frequently ridden in England on one afternoon, in France the next, returning to England to ride on third day. He has also ridden in races on two different courses in England in the same afternoon.

Hotspur Coming Over.

On the Olympic with Donoghue is Captain A. Sidney Galtry, who writes for The London Telegraph under the name of Hotspur. He is a recognized expert on turf affairs and is coming over especially for the international race.

While Jarvis has only one horse to work with and must have him fit, there are still two American colts on which dependence can be placed. Zev is apparently fit to run the race of his life, but if anything should happen to him between now and next Saturday My Own is ready to fill the breach. Horsemen were pleased at the fine trial Admiral Grayson's colt showed at Laurel on Thursday, it being his final work for the Maryland Handicap, which will be run this afternoon at the Laurel track.

While there was much discussion over the pronunciation of his name when Papyrus first landed here the public generally has learned that the accent is on the second syllable. There have been many inquiries, however, as to how the principals in next Saturday's race came to be named. Papyrus was the writing paper of the ancient Egyptians, manufactured from the stem or pith of the papyrus plant. As Papyrus is a son of Tracery, Benjamin Irish, his owner, hit on the name as unusual and at the same time appropriate.

Zev is quite as unusual a name as that of the English representative, and was arrived at in an altogether different manner. Zev is a shortening of Zevely. J. W. Zevely is general counsel for the Sinclair Oil Company. Harry F. Sinclair, owner of Zev and the Rancocas Stable, desiring to name a horse in honor of his friend, whose home is in Washington, D. C., hit upon the name of Zev.

It is expected that one of the largest crowds that ever gathered at a race course in this country to witness a training gallop at about the crack of dawn will be on hand this morning when Bar Gold and Papyrus step out of the Coe-Ford stable preparatory to the longest and stiffest gallop that the Derby winner has yet undertaken.

Will Go Full Distance.

When Papyrus exhibited so much improvement yesterday morning, Trainer Jarvis announced that he would strip the colt this morning and send him for the full mile and a half which he will be called upon to travel just a week from today against Zev. The two colts will come out a little after 7:30 o'clock and will do their regular tour of the track at a walk. This will be followed by a slow breeze of six furlongs to get them warmed up and will be followed by another short walk. Then the two will be stripped and sent away for the long journey.

Probably a third colt will be seen in action. Jarvis has been offered the use by E. E. Jacobs of his good three-year-old, Service of Umbria. The English trainer was greatly pleased by the sportsmanship of the offer, but thought that he would get need the son of Brown Prince II and Umbria at present, at least. Instead he thought he would like better a smart two-year-old to pace up Papyrus at the end of his mile and a half exercise boy to ride Bar Gold. This, of course, will be furnished for him as the visitor has won the hearts of the trainers and everyone else who has come in contact with him. Tom Healey will provide an effective boy for Bar Gold.

It is expected that Papyrus will take on the full weight of 126 pounds today. With a very light exercise boy on Bar Gold and the latter given a good start, Jarvis thinks that his four-year-old will be able to gallop along at a fast enough pace for half of the twelve-furlong journey. Then the two-year-old can pick him up and carry him along for five and a half furlongs to give the Derby winner competition enough to finish out the full mile and a half.

Papyrus may have an audience of many hundreds in the grand stand, on the lawns and along the rail, but he is not likely to be bothered with the camera men this morning. Figuratively speaking, Papyrus has all shot to pieces yesterday, no movie star has ever had more feet of film exposed on her acting in a limited time than did the most talked-of horse in the world yesterday morning.

The early morning was not favorable for picture making. Nevertheless the batteries were focused on the two English horses almost from the time they emerged from the narrow road leading from the Cosden stable to the main race course, until they departed by the same route after about three-quarters of an hour of light exercise.

A high stand erected at the middle of the paddock turn was the eyrie from which the movie men worked while Papyrus was on the track and they caught Papyrus and Bar Gold at the walk and canter and at the start of the six-furlong breeze. When the work was over there was another session at the side of the cottage which Trainer Jarvis and Dr. Pride-Jones call home for the present. Papyrus posed with Bar Gold and alone; for profiles and full face; close-ups and stills. Jarvis has had a world of patience and has done everything in his power to facilitate the work of the camera men.

If Zev is asked to go a route today he probably will get out before Papyrus gets into action, as Trainer Sam Hildreth is an early bird. The track will be in the best condition of the Summer. Superintendent Pela has it watered again last night and the footing is far softer and more like a cushion than when Papyrus first stepped on it. Gangs of men have been over it during the past week picking out even the smallest of stones that have worked up in the process of harrowing. No chances of an accident are being taken and nothing is being left undone to provide a fast and safe track. The course will be harrowed again this morning before the two kings of the turf make their trials.

Police arrangements for the day of the race have been about completed and will be out of the ordinary. A large detachment of State Police will be detailed to assist with the traffic and other important work. These men are famous for their handling of big crowds. Under the guidance of Colonel George F. Chandler the force has taken a place on a par with the Pennsylvania Constabulary and the Canadian Northwest Mounted Police. The New York City Department will also lend its assistance and the borough authorities will vie with each other in making the care and handling of the crowd a notable achievement.

Arcade Beats Mumtaz Mahal In Imperial Produce Plate

KEMPTON PARK, England, Oct. 12.—The Imperial Produce Plate of 9,000 sovereigns, at six furlongs over the straight course, was won today by Anthony de Rothschild's bay colt Arcade, by Tracery out of Doro. Aga Khan's Mumtas Mahal was second and Sir Hedworth Meux's Tiphossa was third. The betting on the winner was 100 to 9 against, on Mumtas Mahal 2 to 9, and on Tiphossa 20 to 1 against. It was the first time Mumtaz Mahal, the odds-on favorite, has been beaten. This gray filly, by The Tetrarch out of Lady Josephine, had earned the sobriquet "The Spotted Wonder," owing to the ease with which she had come home in front in the past.

KNOBBIE CAPTURES JAMAICA FEATURE

Easily Leads Field of Three Home in the Interborough Handicap.

Knobbie, the five-year-old son of Wrack and Gold, which ran unplaced in the $50,000 Kentucky Special at Latonia last Saturday, won an easy victory in the Interborough Handicap, feature event of yesterday's card at the Jamaica course. The race, which was a mile and a sixteenth test and had an added value of $3,800, brought only three starters to the post. Knobbie was coupled with Rigel, the three-year-old Ballot colt, as the J. A. Coburn and Rancocas Stable entry, and the other starter was S. P. Harlan's Tryster.

A crowd of about 8,000 witnessed Knobbie's victory, which was won in hollow fashion, as Tryster, which was weighted practically even with the winner, offered little opposition in the last quarter, finishing four lengths behind Sande on Knobbie and five lengths to the rear of Rigel. The Rancocas combination of Sande on Knobbie and Laverne Fator on Rigel allowed Coltiletti to set the pace with Tryster until the turn out of the backstretch, when they overhauled him and Knobbie galloped to an easy victory.

It was a big day for Sande. The clever rider who has been chosen to ride the crack American three-year-old Zev in the international match race with the English Derby winner, Papyrus, at Belmont Park a week from today, had three winners and two seconds out of a total of five mounts for the day. In addition to his winning effort on Knobbie, he brought home Sea Cove and Pricemaker in front and piloted Blind Play and Hephaistos into second place.

BERNSTEIN BEATS KANSAS AT GARDEN

Gains Decision in 15-Round Bout Before Acting Mayor Hulbert and 11,000 Fans.

A boxer met a fighter last night in Madison Square Garden before a paid attendance of 11,018, and the usual result followed. Jack Bernstein, clever young Yonkers lad who holds the junior lightweight championship title, was the boxer. Rocky Kansas, veteran lightweight of Buffalo, hairy of chest and back, squat in stature with the powerful, muscular torso of a middleweight wrestler, was the fighter.

When the final bell clanged after fifteen rounds Referee Eddie Purdy and Judges Billy (Kid) McPartland and E. W. Dingee gave their decision to Bernstein. There was no legitimate ground on which to dissent from this vote. Acting Mayor Murray Hulbert was a ringside spectator.

Bernstein conceded Kansas a weight handicap and he lacked some of the experience of the Buffalo veteran, but with his wonderful exhibition of boxing skill, his speed and cleverness on the attack and resourcefulness on the defense, Bernstein more than made up this weight and experience deficiency. Accurate with his left jabs and hooks, unerring with his right crosses, and untiring in the pace with which he bounced about the ring, sometimes in a dazzling defense, some times in a spirited attack, Bernstein scored his victory in hollow fashion.

Of the fifteen rounds Bernstein carried off all or even dozen. Kansas had the edge in two rounds, the first and eighth. The other session, the fourth, was about even.

As a spectacle the bout failed dismally. It grated on the nerves of the spectators at times, a fact which was made evident by the jeers of the crowd through some of the rounds.

Kansas weighed 134 pounds and Bernstein 131½.

The semi-final bout of twelve rounds furnished one of the most spectacular battles ever witnessed in a local ring. The principals were Willie Davis, Elizabeth junior lightweight, and Mickey Brown of the east side. The pair furnished a head-to-head slugging session from first bell to last, staging spirited, two-fisted exchanges in every round, which had the crowd on its feet almost throughout. At the end the contest was declared a draw, a decision which met with the undivided approval of the large crowd.

In the first bout scheduled for four rounds Young Egbert, Buffalo boxer, knocked out Nemo Favor, Texas welterweight, in the third round. Buck Josephs, east side bantamweight, and George Vanderbilt of Yonkers, battled to a draw in the second bout, which went its scheduled six rounds.

GIANTS WIN THIRD ON STENGEL'S HOMER

who exposed the incident after the game, feels like pulling the trigger himself, for he had been careful to go up to Meusel and whisper the order into his ear. Possibly it was Bob's bad ear, but at any rate he is still alive and will linger long enough to get at least his loser's share of the "million dollar" series.

Besides being the biggest crowd, it was the finest game of the series—finest, that is, in technical excellence and in thrillingness. In spots, but only in spots, did the fierceness of the struggle approach that of Wednesday's classic. Otherwise, this third game was the nerve-wrecker and the heart-twister of a series that for tenseness and sensations and bitter fighting has had no equal.

Nehf with his superb pitching, Groh with his astounding fielding at third base were the men who saved the game for the Giants, but it was Stengel who won it. It was the venerable Casey who came to the plate in the seventh inning with one out and both teams scoreless. For six terrific rounds the teams had been battling evenly. Nehf had pitched runless ball, so had Sam Jones of the Yankees, and 62,000 were sitting on the edge of their chairs, holding their breath and watching intently at the drama before them.

Casey Saves the Day for the Giants.

Something had to break, somebody give ground, in this hand to hand battle. It could not go on forever, and the team which scored first probably would also win.

It was Casey at the bat now, not the famed hero of Mudville who struck out, but the Casey who hit his homer on Wednesday and won for the Giants. "Somewhere the sun is shining, somewhere the bands are playing, but not in Mudville, for the great Casey had struck out." But the old poem was wrong. The sun was shining, and it shone even brighter for the Giants when Casey, lunging forward, caught that ball squarely with his bat and sent it flying into the right field bleachers.

Not a long hit nor a hard hit. It rose high in the hazy air, seemed to linger in its free flight and then dropped down. As it dropped Babe Ruth was there waiting for it, but Ruth never got it, for it skimmed over the wire fence in front of the bleachers and fell with only a foot to spare.

The impossible had happened again, and Stengel had won his second game of the series, personally and alone. Frank Baker did it against the Giants in the 1913 world's series and was called ever after "Home Run Baker," but Stengel is not a Baker. Two years ago he was a substitute outfielder on the Phillies—a substitute from which there is nothing more humdrum. McGraw got him as an excess baggage in another trade, but Casey was considered nothing more than ballast on the Giants. He was then 35 years old, with bad legs and a wornout body.

But Casey still had his batting eye and he could sock the ball. So in an emergency last season McGraw put the old-timer into centre field, and he made good again. He was slow and he couldn't throw, but he could hit, and yesterday he personally escorted the Giants to a victory that may mean for John McGraw the realization of a long dream—to win three world's championships in a row.

Good Investment for McGraw.

That was a good investment of McGraw's in the Summer of 1921. The old man whom he rescued from a tail-end team may turn out to be one of the biggest figures in the career of the Giant manager. Already old Casey has placed two world's series victories in McGraw's lap, and with two more games the Little Napoleon will have realized his ambition.

From substitute on the Phillies to a world's series hero—that is a story which Horatio Alger might have written. Ralph Henry Barbour would have liked such a plot, and probably Frank Merriwell did something of the sort. A fiction writer, fashioning such a story, would have added only one other touch. He would have had it the final game, with the teams tied in games won and the Yankees three runs ahead in the last of the ninth. Then, with the bases full, Casey would deliver, and as the old fellow tottered around the bases John J. McGraw would meet him and shake his hand.

Yesterday everybody but McGraw was set to patsy the glad hand of welcome to Casey. As he lorped around the bases his big frame waddled from side to side like a bear. There was a suggestion of a swagger about it, and as he came triumphantly down the third base line success went to Stengel's head and he thumbed his nose at Sam Jones. Still, Casey, grown forgetful lately, and then paid the tribute, not of a vast, cataclysmic roar, but of a half-stunned, inarticulate rumble.

If you could call it a mistake, Sam Jones's big mistake yesterday was to give Stengel a fast ball inside, which he turned on and drove into the bleachers. But what pitching strategy can deceive Stengel? On Wednesday Bush pitched him an outside ball and he slashed it on a line to left centre field, far away from the route of yesterday's shorter and feebler drive.

For the Yankees that hit was a Luis Firpo punch with a Dempsey finish. The American Leaguers may yet win the series; their cause is not hopeless and they have shown that they are brave and determined, but, nevertheless, they are in a tight fix and on the defensive again, and their cup of misfortune overflowed when Pipp was hurt.

The inning was the seventh, a few minutes after the Stengel homer had put the Giants ahead. The Yankee Meusel opened for his team with a sharp liner that Young caught, but Pipp was patient and got a base on balls from Nehf. Ward then slashed a ball at Nehf, who deflected it with his glove and turned it toward Bancroft. The latter threw to second and Pipp, trying vainly to beat the ball, slid forcibly into the bag.

As he did so his ankle, already so weak that there was grave doubt whether he would even start the series, turned in under him, and he was thrown flat on his back to the ground. When he didn't get up, Frisch ran over and saw that the ankle in the air and in another instant all the players and umpires and Trainer "Doc" Woods were around him.

Woods promptly bandaged the ankle in a stiff brace of tape, but Pipp was done for the day. He limped off, leaning on the trainer's shoulder, and last night it was said that the injury was giving him much pain, although hope is still held out that the ankle will not stiffen over night and thereby make it impossible for Pipp to play again in the series.

With Pipp out of action, Ruth went to first base and Hinkey Haines to right field. Today the Babe will also play at the first bag, but Hendrick will be in right against a right handed pitcher.

Unsatisfactory Day for Ruth.

On the whole, it was an unsatisfactory day for Ruth. He was eager and willing to hit and he did smash out a single in the opening inning, but after that Nehf was a wiser man and became cautious. He walked the colossal clouter twice—not intentionally, but half so. Nehf was trying to put the ball somewhere near the plate, but his work lacked wholehearted enthusiasm. It would have been insanity, not strategy, of course, to have laid the ball through the heart of the plate and Nehf was not insane. He threw deceptive curves that started for the plate and then drew coyly away. Last year Ruth struck at these bad pitches and struck out, but the new Babe didn't nibble.

However, between the two bases on balls Nehf fanned the big slugger slapping over a third strike that Umpire Nallin called, much to the intense disgust of the mighty hitter. In this respect, at least, Nehf was better than his predecessors, for the strikeout was Ruth's first of the series.

But Nehf did more than that. He pitched what many old-timers called after the finest world's series game they had ever seen. Certainly Nehf pitched the best of his career, and that is no faint praise. His victory was the seventh 1-0 game in series history, and inasmuch as he also beat the Yanks by the same score in the final game of 1921, two of the seven 1-0 classics will go down on the records opposite the name of Arthur N. Nehf of Terre Haute, Ind.

It was a fitting climax for a pitcher who had only an indifferent season this year and was not regarded highly by some as a world series pitcher. On Thursday he was so sick that he could not face the Yankees, but yesterday it was the Yankees who felt slightly ill.

This is not to say that the American Leaguers were frail opponents yesterday. They fought on with desperate grimness and there was not a flaw in their offensive strategy as planned by the much abused Huggins. The Yanks tested Nehf to the very limit of his powers by adopting a waiting policy at the plate. They made him pitch to them; time after time the batter worked the count to three balls and two strikes, and when this scheme failed at the start Huggins switched quickly to a first-ball attack. That also proved fruitless.

Nehf was Cool and Masterful.

There was nothing wrong with the Yankees. They simply were facing a pitcher who was cool, experienced and skilful, a master of his craft. When the Yanks waited to the three and two count, Nehf nearly always swept over a fast, straight ball that flouted the Yankee tactics. He was reached for the hits, two or more times, but the Yankee star was outpitched clearly. Nehf won because of nerve and matchless control; his hand was steady and his brain alive, and Jones, though pitching beautifully, could not prevail.

Nehf needed nothing from his colleagues, and he got most of it from Groh, who came through again in the same miraculous fashion that always characterizes his world series play. In the fifth, for instance, after Ward had started with a single Schang sterilly placed a bunt down the third base line. The ball carried farther than planned, but it was still short for Groh. Coming in rapidly, Heinie clutched it up and from a precarious position made a looping throw which just managed to beat Ward to second. It was a gamble and it worked.

Even better than this was something he did in the seventh. Pipp had been hurt and helped off the field, and then with Ward on first base and two out Schang shot a single to left, moving Ward to second. Deacon Scott, at the plate, caught the ball fairly with his bat and a lightning fast grounder started down the third base line. It was a little to Groh's right and he knocked it down and then went down in a heap himself. Ward was tearing madly for the bag and Heinie was still prostrate, with the ball only a foot away. In what seemed like an agonizingly long period Groh scrambled after the ball, got it, half fell, half dived to the bag and plastered the horsehide against the shoe of the runner.

In the next inning an umpire almost toppled over, and the Giants from a hard-earned victory. The umpire was Bob Hart of the National League, who failed to punish Young for his interferences in Thursday's game. In this other instance Hart got into the path of a throw from Frisch to Kelly and had his cap knocked off by the ball. The Giants didn't weep over the hat, but they did mourn a lost double play.

It started when Witt knocked an infield single to Bancroft with one out. Dugan then hit straight to Groh, who flung to Frisch in time to force Witt at second. Frisch had an obvious double play in front of him, but as he wheeled to throw to Kelly, Hart, stooping over near the bag, lost his balance and sprawled right into the path of the throw. The ball came along low and glanced off Hart's cap and into Kelly's glove, but big George couldn't hold the carom shot. Hart's cap was knocked off, revealing a bald spot of imposing proportions.

Following this bad break Nehf gave Ruth three straight balls, then a strike which the slugger fouled, and finally a fourth ball, wide of the plate. With the tying run on second, the Giants were in trouble, but Meusel did nothing except to lift a fly which Stengel caught in deep centre.

First Hit Off Jones in Third Inning.

Sam Jones started flipping his curve and slow ball as if his intention was to duplicate the no-hit game he pitched recently. In the first inning Scott annoyed him by fumbling Groh's grounder, but Jones escaped and went to the third inning before Frisch bunted safely for the first hit.

Meanwhile, the Yanks had done little or nothing with Nehf. Witt and Dugan grounded out to start things, and Ruth came up to get a tremendous ovation from the biggest of all baseball crowds. A popular king was the Babe, what with his two homers on Thursday and his complete rout of John McGraw in the battle of wits and brute force. When Nehf threw two balls in succession at him, some of the unthinking fans booed, but they changed their tune when Ruth followed by taking two wild swings at strikes, two balls and the same number of strikes, and then Babe smacked a solid single past Nehf's ear into centre field. But the Yankee Meusel lifted a long fly to the Giant Meusel and the inning was over.

After Frisch had bunted safely in the Giant half without getting beyond first base, the Yanks broke through on Nehf for the first time. For three rounds the Yanks had followed waiting tactics, but now Huggins switched tactics and Dugan hit the first ball thrown to him—hit to centre and made two bases.

Huggins might have ordered Ruth to bunt at this stage and catch the Giants off their guard, advancing Dugan to a better scoring position at third. Many second-guessing critics gritted Miller for this alleged oversight, but it is questionable if it would have been wise to make the greatest hitter in the game bunt. Both teams were scoreless and it was only the fourth inning.

Anyway, Ruth got four straight balls from Nehf and walked, putting men on first and second. Now was the place for a bunt, and Meusel was so instructed. Instead of that lanky Bob smashed the first ball past Bancroft, grabbing it, whirled through a double play by way of Frisch and Kelly.

"I told Meusel to bunt and he didn't follow orders," Huggins told Colonel Jacob Ruppert, owner of the Yankees, after the game. "What can I do with a player like that?"

While the double play was in progress Dugan scampered to third, but two out became three out when Pipp grounded between first and second and Frisch went over for a difficult play. He got Pipp, but he never would have nailed Dugan at the plate.

Yankees Threaten in Fifth.

Groh's throw to second to stop Ward checked the Yankees in the fifth, but with Schang on first and one out Scott singled off Nehf's glove, the pitcher spoiling a double play by blocking the ball on Bancroft, who was set for it. On the play Schang arrived at second, but Jones's grounder to Frisch was converted into another double play, the second that the Giants had rushed through in successive innings.

Ruth pleaded pleteward in the sixth to find two already out. Trying to wear Nehf down, he got himself into a two-strike hole. Then, with the figures three and two, Babe let one go by him and was surprised when Nallin proclaimed it for a third strike.

The quiescent Giants foamed in the seventh, and patriarch Stengel delivered the knockout punch. In the same inning was the Pipp tragedy. Action was constant for a few moments and then Babe smacked a solid single past Nehf's ear into centre field. But the Yankee Meusel lifted a long fly to the Giant Meusel and the inning was over.

FORDHAM DEFEATED BY BOSTON COLLEGE

Maroon Eleven Goes Down Before Aerial Attack of Foe in Opening Half of Game.

FINAL SCORE IS 20 TO 0

Forward Passes Produce Two Touchdowns — Captain Darling Registers Third on Long Run.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Oct. 12.—Use of the forward pass at opportune times gave Boston College a 20 to 0 victory over Fordham this afternoon at Braves' Field. The Maroon and Gold used the aerial game as means of scoring two touchdowns when the ball was brought within the scoring distance. The Fordham team was clearly outclassed in the first half, when Boston scored all of its points, but in the second half the Maroon stopped the B. C. backs in their tracks and put up an almost impregnable defense. Boston had much the advantage in punting, the work of Captain "Chuck" Darling featuring over that of Graham and Myers.

Boston started her march for a touchdown early in the first period after both sides had exchanged a series of punts. The work of Ward, McKenny and Captain Darling was outstanding and the ball was brought to Fordham's 27-yard line. On the next play McKenny, freshman quarterback, stood back and hurled a long forward pass to Duffey, who fell over the line for the first touchdown before he was tackled. Captain Darling made several gains, ripping open the Fordham line, but many penalties were inflicted upon the home team for unnecessary roughness.

After the first touchdown was scored Ward carried the ball and in three plays gained 25 yards, bringing the ball to midfield.

Boston College then punted to Manning, who ran back to his 12-yard line. After Graham's return punt McKenny carried the ball 18 yards to the visitors' 17-yard line. After a penalty for off side Darling made 11 yards, and on fourth down and 10 yards to go Boston College made a forward pass, Darling to McKenny, who scored, squirming his way through several Fordham tacklers for the second touchdown. The point after the touchdown was also netted by a forward pass, this time from Elbery to McKenny.

After McNamara had replaced McKenny at quarter for Boston College a punting game ensued, with Boston gaining. Then Ward brought the ball to the 20-yard line, but here Referee O'Brien penalized the home team for roughness and the ball was put in play on the 35-yard line. Manning was injured and replaced by Malone. On the next play Captain Darling evaded two tacklers and had a clear field for a touchdown.

In the second half Myers and Graham featured in carrying the ball for Fordham, but the New York eleven lost ground in punting. The visitors, however, had no real chance to score, but were successful in holding Boston. Darling and McKenny were stopped in their tracks by the Fordham line, Falion and Bill featuring on the defensive for Fordham. For Boston, Darling and Dunbar, together with McKenney, were the bright lights.

COLBY BEATS SPRINGFIELD.

Safety and Touchdown Lead to Victory by Score of 9-0.

Special to The New York Times.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Oct. 12.—Colby sprung a surprise today when its football team handily defeated the Springfield College eleven on Pratt Field, 9 to 0.

Colby scored on a safety in the second period, when Krum of Springfield fumbled behind his own goal line. He recovered the ball but was tackled by Captain Burckel. Colby's other scores were made in the third period. Late in this quarter Ehlholm, Colby centre, intercepted a Springfield forward pass on the one-yard line. It took four plays for Colby to put the ball across, Millet making the score and Burckel following with a drop-kick for the additional point.

NOTRE DAME TEAM FACES ARMY TODAY

Crowd of 30,000 Expected to Witness Annual Clash of Intersectional Rivals.

Despite the fact that a world's series baseball game will be in progress at the Polo Grounds at the same time, officials have prepared accommodations for 30,000 spectators at Ebbets Field, Brooklyn, this afternoon, where the Army and Notre Dame football teams will meet in their annual contest at 3:30 o'clock. Advance sales were so heavy for reserved seats that the tickets were disposed of several days ago. The Ebbets-McKeever Exhibition Company then erected an additional stand with a seating capacity of 2,500, but these sections also were sold out in short order, and so the officials in charge of the contest decided to sell a few general admission tickets for standing room in order to gratify the desire of as many followers of the game as possible.

The Notre Dame eleven, under the charge of Coach Knute Rockne, arrived from the West yesterday morning, and straightway went to the Westchester Biltmore Country Club, Rye, N. Y., where they will remain until 11 o'clock this morning. Yesterday afternoon Rockne sent his athletes through a signal drill on the polo field near the club in order to work out any stiffness that may have developed during the long train ride from South Bend, Ind.

The Army squad will arrive this morning and will go to the Hotel Astor for luncheon, departing for the scene of the contest immediately after. Tonight the Army athletes will attend the performance of the Music Box Revue and will return to their Highland home tomorrow morning. The corps of cadets, 1,400 strong, will arrive on a special train in time for the game, but will return to West Point immediately after the contest.

The lineups for today's game will probably be as follows:

ARMY.		NOTRE DAME.
Doyle	L.E.	Collins
Goodman	L.T.	Noppenbarger
Ellinger	L.G.	Brown
Gartlisch	C.	Walsh

Time of game—3:30 o'clock, Ebbets Field, Brooklyn. Time of periods—15 minutes each.

HOLY CROSS WINS, 32-0.

Breaks Down Providence College Eleven's Stubborn Defense.

Special to The New York Times.

WORCESTER, Mass., Oct. 12.—Holy Cross defeated Providence College here today, 32 to 0. The score, however, does not give due credit to the visitors, who played a hard game all through. A bad break at the opening of the second period seemed to slow up the Providence team when Connors, at left tackle, was forced out of the game for illegal use of hands and his team suffered a 35-yard penalty. This resulted in a touchdown.

NOTABLE CONTESTS ON SCHEDULE TODAY

Many Interesting Games to Feature Football List—Columbia to Play Wesleyan.

N. Y. U. MEETS RENSSELAER

Princeton, Yale and Pittsburgh Face Hard Tests—Colgate to Oppose Ohio State.

Today's football program promises to hold forth a number of interesting contests in addition to the Army-Notre Dame game at Ebbets Field. East, South and West have games listed of sufficient calibre to insure followers of the gridiron sport plenty of action and interest.

Locally, in addition to the game in Brooklyn between the Army and Notre Dame, the contests at Baker Field and Ohio Field will command considerable attention. At the former field Percy Haughton's Columbia team will face the Wesleyan eleven. Last year Columbia defeated Wesleyan by a score of 10 to 6, and while it is too early to consider the Haughton system as being in full swing at Columbia, it nevertheless will be interesting to note whether the Morningside boys will fare as well this year as last, or better. Particularly is this so in view of the fact that Amherst held Columbia to a scoreless tie last Saturday in contrast to the 43 to 6 victory the Blue and White scored in this game in 1922. Wesleyan defeated Bowdoin, 13 to 0, last Saturday.

At Ohio Field New York University will meet Rensselaer Poly, and another good game is looked for here. These two elevens did not meet last year. Another local game is listed for the day with City College meeting St. Stephen's at the Lewisohn Stadium, while over in Hoboken Stevens will play Haverford.

Among the outstanding out-of-town games for the day is the meeting of Pittsburgh and West Virginia in Pittsburgh. Last year the Mountaineers downed Pittsburgh by a score of 9 to 6, and the Panthers are certain to make a strong effort to square that account. The Middle West also will stage a game of note in the meeting of Ohio State and Colgate at Columbus, Ohio. There was no meeting between these two last year.

Although no startling upsets are expected in the games scheduled for Yale, Harvard and Princeton, some unexpectedly stiff opposition may develop. Yale will meet University of Georgia at New Haven, Harvard will face Middlebury at Cambridge, while the Tiger will play host to Georgetown in Princeton.

Washington and Jefferson and Brown should stage an interesting battle at Washington, Pa., while in Philadelphia Pennsylvania will tackle Swarthmore. Penn downed Swarthmore last year, 14 to 6. Penn State will meet Gettysburg at State College, Pennsylvania, while Cornell will meet Williams at Ithaca. The Navy may encounter some unexpectedly strong opposition in West Virginia Wesleyan at Annapolis.

The meeting between Rutgers and Lehigh at New Brunswick is expected to bring forth a spirited contest. Rutgers captured the honors in the engagement between these two last year by a score of 40 to 0, but Lehigh's 28 to 0 victory over Gettysburg last Saturday seems to indicate that the New Brunswick eleven will be hard pressed to repeat its last season's victory.

Other games of note scheduled for today include the meeting of Dartmouth and Boston University at Hanover, Lafayette and Franklin and Marshall at Easton, Union and Amherst at Schenectady and Syracuse and Alabama at Syracuse.

Miss Ederle Sets Another World's Swimming Record

HONOLULU, Oct. 12 (Associated Press).—Another world's swimming record was smashed by Miss Gertrude Ederle of the New York Women's Swimming Association, when she made the 100-metre free-style event in 1 minute, 12 1-5 seconds at last night's session of the A. A. U. meet here. On the previous night she hung up a new record for the 200-metre open water swim. Miss Ederle shared honors with Warren Kealoha, who swam the men's 100-metre backstroke in 1 minute 13 3-5 seconds, breaking his own world's record of 1:14 4-5, which he made at the Olympic games. The outrigger relay team swam the women's 400-metre event in 5 minutes 9 1-5 seconds, thus lowering the mark of 5:11 3-5 made by the Olympic team in 1920. The outrigger swimmers were Miss Wehselau, Miss Bowmer, Janice Lovett and Helen Moses.

MRS. HURD TO PLAY OHIO GIRL IN FINAL

Former Champion and Miss Louise Fordyce in Line for Berthellyn Golf Cup.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 12.—Mrs. Dorothy Campbell Hurd of Philadelphia and Miss Louise Fordyce of Youngstown, Ohio, will meet tomorrow in the final round of the women's invitation golf tournament for the Bethellyn Cup at the Huntingdon Valley Country Club.

Mrs. Hurd, formerly national and international champion, defeated Miss Alice Hanchett of San Francisco, 1 up, in the semi-final round today, while Miss Fordyce, who holds the Ohio State title, eliminated Miss Anita Lihme, Chicago, 1 up, in a thrilling 19-hole match.

A week of hard and fast golf showed its effects in Mrs. Hurd's game today. She slipped a trifle in the form she had maintained throughout the tournament and was forced to extend herself to the limit to defeat the California girl. Mrs. Hurd was 1 up at the turn, but Miss Hanchett squared the match on the eleventh green. The former champion won the twelfth with a par 5 and the thirteenth was halved. Miss Hanchett again squared the match on the fourteenth with a birdie 2. From there on neither was able to gain the upper hand until they drove for the home hole, which Mrs. Hurd won, 4 and 3.

The cards:

Out—
Mrs. Hurd	5	5	6	5	6	4	4	3	6—44
Miss Hanchett	5	5	7	7	5	3	5	4	5—46
In—
Mrs. Hurd	4	6	5	6	3	5	7	5	4—45—89
Miss Hanchett	6	3	6	3	5	7	5	5	5—45—91

Miss Fordyce furnished the second big surprise of the tournament by defeating Miss Lihme. After flashing remarkable form in the second round yesterday, when she eliminated Miss Glenna Collett of Providence, recently dethroned national champion, Miss Lihme suffered a relapse today. Her long drives failed to keep the middle of the course and she was wild and uncertain on short putts. The match was nip and tuck all the way. Coming to the eighteenth hole 1 down, Miss Lihme drove out of bounds, but her next two strokes put her on the green, from where she holed out in two more and squared the match with a 6. Miss Fordyce landing in the brook with her second and in the trap fronting the green with her fourth. Playing the extra hole, two straight shots put Miss Lihme well on the green, while Miss Fordyce was just off, in the rough. But the best shot of the day followed, when the Ohio girl pitched straight for the cup, the ball rolling forty-five feet and dropping in for a birdie 3, which decided the battle.

The cards:

Out—
Miss Fordyce	5	5	5	7	6	3	4	4	3—41
Miss Lihme	5	5	6	6	5	3	4	4	x—39

Miss Lihme	7	5	6	5	2	5	7	6	5—46

Extra hole—Miss Fordyce 3, Miss Lihme 4.

TELLS OF OPENING PHARAOH'S TOMB

Arthur Weigall Says X-Ray Will Be Used on the Body of Tut-ankh-Amen.

COMES HERE TO LECTURE

Arrives on Berengaria, Which Brings 2,535 Passengers—Rev. J. R. Straton Returns.

Arthur Weigall, who for many years was Inspector General of Antiquities in Egypt, and was a guest of the Government at the opening of the tomb of King Tut-ankh-Amen in Western Thebes, Upper Egypt, arrived yesterday on the Cunarder Berengaria to lecture on the discoveries in that section, on which he labored for several years.

Mr. Weigall went to Luxor first in 1904 and worked there until the war in 1914, during which time he discovered the tomb of Queen Tiy, containing the body of Akhnaton, the heretic king and father-in-law of Tut-ankh-Amen, and the tombs of Yuaa and Tuau, the grandparents of Akhnaton. He said the furnishings were in such a good state of preservation in Akhnaton's tomb that a silk cushion embroidered in gold was quite soft to the touch and fit for use.

Asked about the opening of the royal tomb of Tut-ankh-Amen, Mr. Weigall said that it would not be done for some time as there was still a good deal of work to be done in emptying the two chambers that had been opened.

"There is every reason to believe that the inside tomb will be found intact after the heavy granite cover has been removed, which will be no light task," he said. "Robbers penetrated the two outer chambers, but did not attempt to force the third chamber. It is planned to use the X-ray to determine Tut-ankh-Amen's age. It is probable that the opening of the inner tomb will reveal that Tut-ankh-Amen was the Pharaoh of the Exodus and clear up many obscure points in biblical lore.

"It also may show that the Jews were migrating to Palestine from Egypt, and met Moses and said, 'Come on and let's get into this good trade territory in the East.' I rather think that it may be something interesting like that. Jolly interesting if it were."

Explaining where the ancient Egyptians came from, Mr. Weigall said they were Asiatics with a slight influx of the Semitic races. "Tut-ankh-Amen," he said, "had Semitic blood in his veins. Generally speaking the people who they are today. That is, white, like the Copts, who have intermarried and kept apart from the Moslems in Egypt for the past 1,300 years. 'Tut' is the name for 'Doud' in Hebrew, which is 'David' in English. I expect that the inner door of cedar wood at the entrance of the royal tomb will be found closed with the nails of solid gold which were used in all the funerals of the ancient Egyptian kings."

Another passenger was the Rev. John Roach Straton, pastor of Calvary Baptist Church, 322 West Fifty-seventh Street, who was met at the pier by more than 200 members of his congregation singing hymns. He said there was no truth in the report that he intended to resign from the church. He said he returned with nothing but love in his heart.

Captain W. R. D. Irvine, master of the Berengaria, said fog was encountered on the voyage and that beginning today Atlantic liners will go further south because of the presence of ice.

The liner brought 574 first, 770 second and 1,191 third class passengers, in addition to mails and specie.

Verbrugghen Quartet.

The Verbrugghen Quartet completed at Aeolian Hall yesterday a fortnight's ambitious performances of chamber music drawn from "cycles" by historic masters. For the final program the visitors gave Brahms's C minor quartet, op. 51, No. 1; Mozart's A major, dedicated to Haydn, and the Posthumous C-sharp minor, op. 131, of Beethoven.

REJECT SAMUEL'S OFFER.

Arab Notables See In It No Solution of Palestine Problems.

By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

JERUSALEM, Oct. 12.—After Sir Herbert Samuel's speech yesterday to the Arab notables the Arabs discussed his offer among themselves, and subsequently replied that they unanimously rejected the plan for the establishment of an Arab agency as in no way satisfying Arab aspirations. Since they had never recognized the validity of the Jewish agency, they said they did not now wish to seem to recognize it by accepting an Arab agency. The Arabs promised to give a detailed reply to the Government soon.

It is important to observe that the newly created National Party, understood to be a non-extremist body, also rejected the offer at a gathering held before the official announcement was made.

Meanwhile the Arab executive committee has approached the provisional leaders of the new so-called Moderate Party, asking them to combine on a basis of mutual compromises. A provisional agreement has been reached, and arrangements have been made for a joint council meeting here next week of all the parties.

It is well understood among local Arabs that the final confirmation of the mandate necessitates an entire change of tactics by the malcontents.

MANY SEE BABY PARADE.

Archbishop Hayes Reviews March in Cherry Hill Section.

The Sisters of Christian Doctrine of Madonna House, 173 Cherry Street, held their second annual baby parade yesterday and most of the mothers and many of the fathers in the Cherry Hill District turned out to see the floats. From a stand at Cherry and Market Streets Archbishop Hayes, Mgr. Michael J. Lavelle and other Catholic dignitaries reviewed the march and afterward the prizes were awarded by the Archbishop.

The parade, headed by the Fire Department band, consisted of twenty floats depicting scenes in early American history, and a score of decorated baby carriages, the occupants of which were watched over by the parents. On one float were ten Chinese babies.

The principal prizes, three silver cups, were awarded to Thomas Reynolds, 7 months old, 63 Pike Street; Stephen Faracy, 9 months, 241 Clinton Street, and John Siamo, 9 months, 64 Madison Street.

Marie S. Zendt, Soprano, Pleases.

Marie Sidenius Zendt, a soprano from Chicago, with a program of songs in many languages, pleased the audience which assembled in Aeolian Hall for her first New York recital last evening. Especially enjoyable was a group of songs in Swedish which she sang with great enthusiasm and understanding. She sang works of Buononcini, Bach and Mozart with an unfluttered exactness and evenness of tone, at times with power, but never did she strain her voice beyond its capacity of musical effectiveness. Her charming manner and the pleasantness of her voice aroused much enthusiasm from her hearers who were insistent in their demands for encores. Richard Hageman was of valuable assistance at the piano.

Sing Italian Opera on Columbus Day

Italy in New York had its holiday opera in "The Barber of Seville," happily chosen for Columbus Day at the Century. The house sold out applauded Basiola in Figaro's comedy of the "Catalogue" air, de Biasi in that of the "Calumny," Cervi as Don Bartolo, Miss Falco as the maid. The play was the thing more than the musical ensemble, though Consuelo Escobar and Chiappini brought the singing lesson to life and at rare moments to sparkle. Nor did Fortune Gallo's company call it a day till Pavley and Oukrainsky followed in a midnight pantomime of Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun." At the matinee another San Carlo cast repeated "Carmen."

Ruth Draper's Sunday Recitals.

Ruth Draper will be heard in New York this season in an indefinite series of Sunday night recitals. The first will be given Oct. 28 at the Selwyn Theatre. Miss Draper, who recently returned from Europe, brought with her considerable new material.

WAGNERIAN SINGERS ARRIVE.

Opera Company to Open Its Tour in Washington Monday.

The Wagnerian Opera Company arrived yesterday from Hamburg on the Reliance of the United States American lines with Theodore Lattermann as the general director. He said the company would open in Washington next Monday night and then tour the United States and return to New York toward the end of December for a six weeks' engagement.

In January Siegfried Wagner, son of the composer Richard Wagner, will come to America and direct the orchestra in the production of his new opera "The Bear Skin." He will also be the guest director of the New York Symphony Orchestra and will give a concert at the Metropolitan Opera House which will include the works of three generations, Franz Liszt, his grandfather; Richard Wagner, his father, and his own.

The object of the son of the noted German composer in coming to this country is to raise a fund for the Festival Theatre at Bayreuth, Germany, created by his father, which has no finances with which to operate.

Among the principals on board the Reliance of the Wagnerian Opera Company were Miss Elsa Alsen-Henneberger, dramatic soprano; Miss Emma Bart, contralto; Hermann Eck, basso; Editha Fleischer, leading soprano of the Berlin Opera; Rud Cecatka-Ritter, tenor of the Stuttgart Opera Company; Else Centner-Fischer of the Berlin Opera Company; Robert Hutt, tenor of the Berlin Opera Company; Edward Kandl, tenor; Max Lipmann, tenor of the Manheim Opera Company; Gustave Schutzendorf, baritone, and formerly of the Metropolitan Opera Company; Mrs. Della Schutzendorf-Reichert, formerly soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company; Miss Itsuko Seno, a new Japanese soprano diva, who will sing "Madame Butterfly"; Emil Staudenmeyer, baritone of the Frankfort Opera Company; Herman Weil, baritone, and Desider Zador and Benno Ziegler, bassos.

Five-Year-Old Pietro Mazzini Captivates Paris as Chopin Interpreter.

Copyright, 1923, by The New York Times Company.
Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Oct. 12.—America soon will hear 5-year-old Pietro Mazzini, who just now is creating a stir in Paris musical circles. The child is the son of an Italian singer, and despite the fact that he has lived fewer years than the average brilliant piano pupil requires to learn the rudiments of the pianoforte, he is considered an exceptional interpreter of Chopin.

He has indicated musical feeling since the age of one year when, listening to his mother's practicing, he accompanied the beat of the music with a movement of his head. He had his first lesson on the pianoforte last November, and now his mother, Carla Benassi, a well-known Italian soprano, says she has nothing more to teach him.

In recognition of the child's genius the officials of a piano company which possesses one of Chopin's pianos have permitted him to play on it.

Pietro knows twenty-two difficult works of the masters by heart and reads the most complicated music naturally.

Of almost as great interest as his genius is the paradox of the child. He plays all games 5-year-old children like and devotes himself to the same pets. And yet at the piano he says he prefers Chopin because it is always sad.

THEATRICAL NOTES.

Florence Eldridge and Kathlene MacDonell will join the cast of "The Dancers" in Albany tonight, in the leading feminine roles. The play will open at the Broadhurst next Wednesday night.

Beryl Mercer will play the title role in the Equity Players' forthcoming production of "Queen Victoria," by David Carb and Walter Prichard Eaton. This will be the first production of the Equity season.

"White Desert" was produced in Stamford last night, preparatory to coming to the Princess on Monday night.

Babe Ruth has been offered a role in the Chicago company of "Little Jesse James," now in formation.

Jane Manner will give a series of readings of the plays to be acted by Duse during her forthcoming season. Beginning Oct. 24 with "Cosi Sia," Miss Manner will give Wednesday morning recitals each week at the Hotel Plaza.

GOLD FOR VETERAN ACTORS.

Players of Other Days to Receive Bequests Today.

Thirty-one veteran actors and actresses, guests at the Actors' Fund Home at New Brighton, Staten Island, will receive $50 each in gold coin this afternoon under the will of the late Percy Williams, vaudeville producer, who died last September. They will be brought to the rooms of the Actors' Fund in the Columbia Theatre Building, Forty-seventh Street and Broadway.

Prominent among the recipients will be Miss Virginia Buchanan, eighty-one years old; William H. Gilbert, once a prominent member of Augustin Daly's staff, and Leon John Vincent, who appeared in old Niblo's Garden on the Bowery.

Lehar Opera From Play "Romance."

Fred Wreede, musical publisher and theatrical producer, returned on the Reliance yesterday from a trip to Vienna, where he arranged for a new opera ("Romance") based on the play by Edward Sheldon, to be written by Franz Lehar, composer of "The Merry Widow." The opera will be ready for production next season, Mr. Wreede said. While in Vienna he attended a revival of "The Merry Widow" at which Lehar directed the orchestra.

He also arranged for the use here of "The Bridal Night," a new play by Ludwig Herzoe, the author of "Morphia."

Composer Sings His Own Songs.

Solomon Golub gave a recital of his own compositions last evening at the Town Hall. The songs, which were in Yiddish, each had its own complete story to tell, some light and short and others longer and with a strong human appeal, reflecting various aspects of Jewish life. Mr. Golub has an earnest style of giving his works, which held the attention of the audience, and even those who did not understand the words, unwaveringly confined their interest to his graphic presentations. He was assisted by Pauline Kaliman, soprano, and Livio Mannucci, 'cellist.

EX-PREMIER SPEEDS WEST.

Lloyd George Sees Canada's Wilds on Trip to Winnipeg.

ON BOARD THE LLOYD GEORGE SPECIAL TRAIN, ENROUTE FOR WINNIPEG (via White River, Ont.), Oct. 12.—With their train traversing Western Ontario on its 1,400 mile journey from Toronto to Winnipeg, members of the Lloyd George party got their first glimpse and conception today of the great distances, the wild scenic beauty and the rich natural resources which show the great contrast between this country and Europe. The British war Premier had visited Canada twenty-four years ago, but to Dame Margaret and Miss Megan Lloyd George it was a new experience to view a world so different from their own.

Lloyd George said that the intervening years had wrought great changes in Canada, or that, perhaps, he viewed it with different eyes. He was greatly impressed not only with the beauty of the scenery but with the material wealth of the region traversed, a committee of Ontario business men and industrialists who traveled part of the way with him having told him of the treasures of cobalt, nickel and silver that were being reaped in the development of the territory. He commented on the poverty of Europe with such untold wealth in America.

The journey lay through a heavily wooded country where a second growth of spruce and birch is gradually replacing the ravages wrought by the woodsman's axe or by forest fires. It is sparsely settled, with a succession of wonderful lakes, a paradise for the hunter, the trapper and the fisherman.

"It is like passing through an endless gallery hung with splendid paintings—and paintings by first rate artists, too," said Lloyd George as he told the newspaper correspondents accompanying him on his tour how greatly impressed he was with what he had seen. Dame Margaret and Miss Megan expressed their wonder at the fast emerging picture of a new world as their train was hurrying away from the East with its closer resemblance to Europe.

This was the first day of unbroken rest that the British statesman has experienced since his arrival in America and he seemed to enjoy it thoroughly. Stops were made at division points, but they were few and far between, averaging perhaps one stop every five hours. Consequently there were fewer demands on Lloyd George for appearances on the rear platform of his private car and the speeches that worked havoc with his voice during his first days in the United States and Canada.

There are two radio outfits on the train through which reports of news events the world over are received.

Impressed by Long Distances.

When Mr. Lloyd George sent word to the newspaper correspondents that he was ready to receive them, through Sir William Sutherland, a noted English Liberal, the train had been traveling for three hours since its last stop, and it was almost two hours, according to the schedule, before it was to make its next stop. Accustomed to the short distances in European traveling, the British statesman laughingly asked the correspondents:

"Will some one be good enought to tell me how long it will be before we get somewhere?"

He commented on the wealth of the country. Speaking of the sparse settlement of the region through which the train was traveling, he said:

"Why, there should be slums in Europe with such an abundance of wealth over here, I do not know."

At Biscotasing this morning the Lloyd George party got its first glimpse of the Indians. The Hudson Bay Company established a post there which it still maintains. As the train sped past, the Indians at the post in their native panoply clustered about a huge Union Jack, gave cheers and yells.

At Chapleau there was a stop to change engines, and Lloyd George made his appearance on the rear platform. A crowd had assembled.

In a conversational tone he said that Great Britain was immensely grateful to the people of Chapleau for what they had done during the war.

"How many did you send overseas?" he asked.

Some one told him that 300 had gone from the district.

"That was a great stunt," the war Premier said, lapsing as he does occasionally into American slang.

Rainbow Spanned Two Nations.

Memories of Niagara haunted Mr. Lloyd George all day. He was full of enthusiasm over what he had seen there.

"Did the rainbow that arched the falls seem to you a symbol of the future?" he was asked.

"It threw itself clear across the gulf that divides the two nations," he replied.

The train is due at Winnipeg tomorrow afternoon. A drive about the city and an address in the evening are the only events on the Winnipeg program.

JESTS AT LLOYD GEORGE WAYS

Saturday Review Says He Eclipses Charlie Chaplin.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Saturday, Oct. 13.—The Saturday Review says: "Mr. Lloyd George is getting a tremendous reception on the other side of the Atlantic and this may surprise some among us who have seen how here his star, once of the first magnitude and that hardly more than a year ago, has waned and almost faded utterly away. But we know our Mr. Lloyd George very well and Americans and Canadians do not know him at all, except by report.

"To them he is the very latest and biggest 'attraction,' and they all go out to see and perchance hear him. For the moment he is more interesting than any cinema or cinema actor, in fact he is the cinema of Aerica. The other cinema people understand this and play up to him. Hence the fact that Charlie Chaplin, till then the most popular man on the other side, visited him in his box in a New York Theatre.

"What a splendid bit of advertising for both! Whose was the brain that conceived it? Remembering how effectively Mr. Lloyd George used to stage manage his numerous conferences we incline to think that the odds are in his favor."

PETER B. KYNE DEPARTS.

Novelist Leaves Lloyd George Party —Differed on Arrangements.

ON BOARD LLOYD GEORGE'S SPECIAL TRAIN, CHAPLEAU, Ontario, Oct. 12 (Associated Press).—Peter E. Kyne, the American novelist, has left the Lloyd George party after having joined in at New York, to assist in the making of arrangements, especially in the United States.

Although there has been no official word concerning a disagreement, it is understood that Mr. Kyne left of his own will when he and Mr. Lloyd George were found to hold different views on the question of some speaking arrangements in the United States.

POLITICAL SIGNS AND PORTENTS.

On Thursday Secretary HUGHES had a conference with President COOLIDGE lasting a full hour and a half. In the fact itself there was nothing ominous, but the vigilant Washington correspondents perceived, or thought they did, "a noticeable agitation on Mr. HUGHES's part as he left the Executive Offices." If there was any agitation at all, it must have been noticeable. Long schooling in public life and a marked native power of self-control have given the Secretary of State a fashion of countenance not easily altered. All the same, a flood of speculation was let loose in Washington in regard to what it could have been that had disturbed Mr. HUGHES. Was it something connected with the World Court? Had it anything to do with what LLOYD GEORGE has been saying? Was the official news from China or from France or Germany disquieting? Nobody knew, but everybody was guessing. Possibly the Secretary merely had a toothache. But at a critical time, when there is a dearth of actual information, great significance has to be seen in trifles light as air.

Political inferences of another sort, and perhaps more secure, have been drawn from recent interviews with two public men "mentioned" for high office. Ex-Governor LOWDEN was recently at an agricultural fair in this State and was questioned about his possible candidacy for the Presidency, along with the report that he might be named Ambassador to London in succession to Colonel HARVEY. But he protestingly said that he was not a candidate for anything. All his thoughts were of fat oxen and bloodied stock and silos. Couldn't the correspondents see that he was just a happy farmer and let him alone?

Even more suggestive, not to say suspicious, was the attitude toward politics lately assumed by that other Cincinnatus, Senator RALSTON of Indiana. A newspaper man caught him on his farm, and asked what he had to say about the talk that he might be made the Democratic candidate in next year's Presidential election. Mr. RALSTON was grieved and almost hurt by the question. To be sure, he was not insensitive to the "courtesy" of those who were talking about him in that connection, but the thing was quite impossible. He, too, loved his broad acres. There was all his heart, and there he would live and die, if he could, far from the strife of tongues. The wise correspondent who reported the conversation must have smiled as he went away to report to his managing editor that there was absolutely no "story" to be got out of Senator RALSTON. He knew that in reality he had got a most telltale story.

UNCLE SAM'S CLERKS.

Loud roared the Republican spellbinders in 1920 for the decapitation of the horde of useless, superfluous, tax-eating placemen foisted into Federal office by the war and a Democratic Administration, "extravagant and wasteful," as the other fellow's party always is. One bolting patriot called for 300,000 heads. The Republican Congress reduced, and there are about 110,000 more Federal employes than there were in 1916. A Washington dispatch to The Herald cites official figures given by the Civil Service Commission.

Nearly 550,000 civilians are working or said to work for the Government. Ed populeus a city is bureaucracy. The increase in some of its forces is hard to understand. It is intelligible that the fattest growth, about 55,000, should be in the Post Office Department, whose business is always growing; but why does the State Department need 4,000 persons in 1923 though it managed to struggle along with 3,700 in 1916? New financial measures have put more work on the Treasury Department, but does that account for 25,000 more names on its payroll? Nearly five years after the armistice the War Department has about 14,000 more civilian employes, the Navy Department 7,000 more than it had in 1916. Reduce armaments, multiply clerks!

The Department of Agriculture has only some 1,500 more, prospering modestly, like the privileged pursuit it encourages. Labor's laborers have increased by 50 per cent. The Interior Department alone has diminished its staff—a churlish, unneighborly and unsocial proceeding. A few other agencies have depleted their ranks a little; the Panama Canal Commission has made a deep cut, whether deep enough or not, from nineteen-odd to less than eight thousand. There has even been a very slight paring in the Government Printing Office, in old days, at least, a preserve of politics. Of the recent creations, the Veterans' Bureau has 28,000 employes, the Shipping Board 3,000. We almost forgot to mention one of the most instructive instances of the development of personnel. The Superintendents of the State, War and Navy Building employed 217 persons in 1918. He employs 1,304 in 1923. One can't resist the impression that the Government buildings are under-janitored.

It would be unfair to jeer at the Republicans for their failure to keep their promises. The politicians of both parties believe that the more offices the merrier, so long as they are held by persons of the right political stamp; and civil service reform hasn't lessened the immortal thirst for offices. The more there are, the more chance for "our man." The City of Bureaucracy is more likely to have a million inhabitants than to lose population. Uplifters, enthusiasts, societies, minorities are always imposing additional bureaus, commissions, boards and what not upon the country, having cajoled or threatened Congress.

GOLD IMPORTS AND TRADE BALANCE.

Up to the end of September the United States had imported from the outside world during 1923 about $200,000,000 gold; which, added to some $35,000,000 produced from our own mines, and allowing for the period's small gold exports, should have increased our actual stock of gold by more than $200,000,000 in nine months. That this large importation was not needed as a basis of credit is sufficiently proved by the fact that gold in the reserve of the Federal banks has increased only $66,000,000 during the period. The difference between that sum and the known increase of the country's gold holdings (all of which go originally into the Federal Reserve) represents the use of gold certificates instead of Federal Reserve notes by these banks in paying out currency to member institutions.

If these huge gold imports are superfluous, why do they continue? One answer might be that gold is traditionally expelled from countries with depreciated currencies and sent to countries whose currency is at par. Theoretically, this principle would apply in the present case; for, although more than one-half of our recent importations have been Treasury gold sent from England, even the pound sterling is at present depreciated, on the international market, about 6½ per cent. from gold parity. There are, however, some other aspects to the movement which have a somewhat novel interest.

The recent thorough examination of the national trade balance by the Department of Commerce showed that last year's net gold imports of $288,000,000 were not a direct result of the $754,000,000 surplus of merchandise exports over imports for the period. On the contrary, the department calculated that this merchandise export surplus was much more than offset by the year's purchase of foreign securities for American investors and by remittances on account of American tourists' expenditure abroad, American relief funds and money sent home by immigrants. Allowing for all offsets in the nature of foreign money invested here and interest paid on our holdings of foreign securities, the department's experts reckoned the year's debit on these accounts at $1,094,000,000, or $320,000,000 more than the credit on account of the merchandise export surplus.

If so, why the $288,000,000 net gold import? A good deal of light was thrown on that question by the department's investigation of what might be called the fleeting indebtedness of the outside world to American bankers and merchants. This debt unquestionably reached huge dimensions in years like 1920 and 1919, when our surplus of exports attained such heights as $2,900,000,000 and $4,000,000,000. For the most part, it must have been carried in this country among "accounts receivable," and naturally it would be the wish of foreign merchants and bankers to reduce this kind of indebtedness and in due course to pay it off.

In response to further inquiry addressed to some 1,500 banks, trading concerns and exporting manufacturers, the department ascertained that such open accounts with these American business houses had been reduced from $778,000,000 in the middle of 1921 to $375,500,000 in the middle of 1922. There is good reason to assume that the process of repayment has continued, and that the continuing gold shipments to America have been a part of the machinery by which the indebtedness was being reduced.

Evidently, however, such a consolidation does not clear up the problem of our own enormous and increasing accumulation of superfluous gold. It is possible that this movement will not be checked until, whether through excess of imports on merchandise trade account or through resumption on a large scale of American purchases of foreign securities, the actual balances of international payments will run more heavily against us.

AGAIN INVADING THE PARK.

Before the plan of the Transit Commission to change the route of the Washington Heights subway, so as to build it under Central Park, is adopted, it should be subjected to the closest scrutiny. A great many questions require answer. In all the stretch from Sixty-second Street to 107th and 110th are there to be no subway stations? If there are to be, will they not have at least to abut upon Park property? Then the city will want to know a great deal about the method of construction. Is there to be an open cut along the west side of the Park—kept open for how long nobody can tell? This would seem to be implied in the statement that some 250 trees will have to be removed. Of course, it is added that these will be "replaced" after the work is done. Perhaps the Transit Commission has an idea of the ease of replacing trees different from that of the Park authorities.

The change of plan is argued for partly on the ground of economy. It is estimated that something like $2,500,000 could be saved by building under the Park instead of, as originally intended, under the street west of the Park. But if there is to be any impairment or disfigurement of Central Park, the sum to be saved is not to be seriously considered. It would be only the smallest fraction of what the entire subway would cost, and would amount to nothing compared with the bad precedent set in making any use of Central Park except for park purposes, or as an offset to the injury threatened. The whole scheme ought to be looked into with the utmost care, and guarantees given that no part of it shall be allowed to interfere even temporarily with the integrity of Central Park, before the Board of Estimate consents to this sudden change of plan.

ANGLO-AMERICAN NAVAL DISPARITY.

The question of elevating the guns of the fleet is again raised in Washington, this time by Captain FRANK SCHOFIELD of the General Board of the Navy. He contends that thirteen of the eighteen battleships retained under the terms of the Washington Naval Treaty are inferior in gun range to British ships. Evidently he refers to the five Queen Elizabeths and the five Royal Sovereigns, which have main batteries of eight 15-inch guns. Except the Maryland, which is equipped with eight 16-inch guns, all the American battleships now in commission carry 14-inch and 12-inch guns, most of them the former. When the two sister ships of the Maryland join the fleet we shall have three dreadnoughts with guns outranging those of any battleships of the British Navy. When the new Nelson and Rodney are built—each will carry nine 16-inch guns—the American superiority will be slight. But elevation of guns, as well as calibre, is involved. The greater range of the British is in part due to angle of fire. However, the British have officially denied elevating their guns since the Washington conference. As the Admiralty holds that the Washington treaty forbids alterations in "general type of mounting of main armament," the United States Navy will remain at a disadvantage unless our Government makes its own favorable interpretation of the provision in question, which it is not disposed to do, or unless the parties to the treaty by negotiation agree to uniform elevations. Secretary DENBY has proposed this solution. American naval officers argue that parity with the British fleet should include the factor of gun range.

Captain SCHOFIELD points out that our ships are not so well protected against torpedoes and bombs as are the British ships, and that they have fewer oil-burners. There seems to be nothing in the treaty to prevent deck and bottom alterations to give our ships better protection. Our latest dreadnoughts use oil for fuel, and the other battleships could be reconstructed so as to do so. "The entire program," says Captain SCHOFIELD of the plans the General Board will present to Congress at the coming session, "would cost about as much as one new battleship." He adds that "we would probably double the value of our fleet by spending on it about 5 per cent. of its first cost." Apparently he includes gun elevations. Congress made an appropriation for that purpose, but when the British denied elevating their guns, and took the position that the naval treaty forbade it, the appropriation was canceled.

It is unfortunate that Secretary HUGHES's original proposal to apply the naval ratios to all classes of ships was not adopted at the Washington conference. The decision to confine the ratios to capital ships and airplane carriers followed a failure to agree on the allocation of submarine tonnage. "As every type of vessel" below capital grade was ruled by the "experts to be a potential anti-submarine craft," says HECTOR C. BYWATER, the British naval specialist, "the possibility of unlimited underwater construction naturally led to the abandonment of restrictions on the building of all light surface vessels." So today there is competition in the building of these types. Great Britain having a long lead in cruisers and the United States a marked superiority in destroyers and submarines. These inequalities make negotiations on the subject of gun elevations somewhat difficult when Great Britain has the "edge." But there should be a way out.

STEEL AT ANNAPOLIS.

The beating of the sword into the plowshare, and the spear into the pruning hook, is to be exemplified on a grander scale by the United States Navy. The steel from the battle cruisers to be scrapped under the naval disarmament treaty is going to be put into the new athletic stadium at the Naval Academy. There is perhaps a sort of mimetic magic in this; the midshipmen of the football team, glancing for a moment between plays at the stadium around them, will remember that underneath the concrete is the steel destined for warships, warships bearing the great names of the Ranger and the Constitution. It must be an unimaginative football player who doesn't get fresh inspiration from that.

West Point, naturally, will have to do something of the same sort to hearten its own players. Possibly it will be construction of a stadium from the metal of German guns captured in the late hostilities. Even then there would always be a chance that prospective generals might be beaten by a team like Notre Dame, which carries all its steel under its football toggery.

UNFITNESS SELF-REVEALED.

The railing accusation which HENRY FORD yesterday brought against the Secretary of War may or may not injure Mr. WEEKS, but is certainly damaging to Mr. FORD himself. Without a scintilla of proof in justification of what he alleges, Mr. FORD accuses Secretary WEEKS of corruption in office. For nothing else can in reality be understood by his charge that the Secretary has been guided in his official action in regard to the Muscle Shoals plant by the private motives of a bond broker. Saying nothing about Mr. FORD's political flourishes in regard to what he would have done for the farmer if allowed his way in making cheap fertilizer at Muscle Shoals, the quality of mind and character shown in this attack upon Secretary WEEKS is enough of itself to mark him as entirely unfit for the Presidency.

The American people do not want in that office a man who flings about unsupported accusations of this nature, after the fashion of a hole-and-corner politician seeking votes from ignorant and prejudiced men. On the merits of the case, Mr. FORD has not a leg to stand on. His own lawyers agreed at Washington with the Department of Justice that the Government was under a binding contract to sell the Gorgas plant to the Alabama Power Company. Now Mr. FORD exclaims at this as if it were part of a foul conspiracy. In the act he writes himself down in a way not to be mistaken by any sensible man as absolutely unfit for the responsibilities, not to speak of the dignities and decencies, of high public office.

WHY LIBERALS WEEP.

Thursday's session of the British Imperial Conference seems to have been something of an experience meeting. Lord CURZON explained the Corfu episode from the Foreign Office standpoint. Lord ROBERT CECIL explained it from the League standpoint. Then the field was open for the Dominion Premiers, who criticised from the standpoint of those who were not responsible in the crisis; and some of them seem to have spoken harshly. Particularly General SMUTS, discussing the matter "on a high moral plane," is said to have moved Lord ROBERT to tears.

It is to be observed that nobody accuses Lord CURZON of having wept, that statesman's ideals not being impossibly high, and his mind being gifted with a fortunate protective mechanism, a sort of psychological paravane, which enables him to turn aside the torpedoes of unsympathetic criticism. Lord ROBERT CECIL might have retorted unkindly, of course. He might have reminded SMUTS of his authorship of the intricate legal argument justifying the inclusion of pensions and separation allowances in German reparations, a performance which has brought tears from other liberals.

Herein lies a weakness inherent in middle-of-the-road liberalism for which those of other political faiths can feel only a kindly sympathy. Liberals regarding their political enemies froth at the mouth, as do most other people; regarding each other they weep—each that the other is unworthy of the high ideals they both profess. There is rather more esprit de corps among conservatives and radicals.

Yet there are liberals and liberals. Mr. LLOYD GEORGE, for example, has done a good deal of weeping in his time, yet his bursts of tears are interspersed with high and optimistic visions. Just now, for instance, he is convinced that "if it could be made "so plain that all the world would "understand it that the United States "and Great Britain would make common "cause against war, the need "for firing even a revolver, let alone "a gun, would have passed." The French air fleet would disappear and the golden age would be at hand. Failing some such combination, we gather from Mr. LLOYD GEORGE's recent speeches, we must expect the worst. Indeed, if we go back a few weeks to some of his comments on the state of Europe, the worst is already with us. Mr. LLOYD GEORGE bears a number of resemblances to the well-known Figaro, but he reverses that worthy's motto: he weeps always, to keep from laughing.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Drought Is Caused by Airplanes.

One should not smile too pityingly or scornfully at the news that the people living near Belgrade, suffering severely from drought this summer, have ascribed it to the establishment of a flying field near the Serbian capital, nor should one wonder that the Government is seriously embarrassed by the vehemence and number of demands made upon it to put an end to the prevention of needed rainfall with which the airplanes are charged.

The evidence on which these demands are made is very strong—quite as strong as that on which many beliefs in all parts of the world are based. A drought more severe than the oldest inhabitants can remember has followed the appearance of the airplanes, and, obviously, they caused it—obviously, because nobody can suggest any other reason. So it is a fair presumption that it will continue as long as the uneasy machines are allowed to disturb atmospheric conditions.

Logicians, to be sure, have pretended that the rule of "afterward, therefore because," is not of universal application, but logicians are a small and not much respected part of any population, and it is common knowledge that when one thing happens right after another it very often can be demonstrated beyond anybody's questioning that the second thing was the result of the first.

The Serb peasants are not fools, and, like all peasants, they are what is called "weather-wise." It is more than probable that if the flight of airplanes over their country were stopped the rain would come again before very long, and then will they have the best of rights to say "We told you so!" to such doubters of their meteorological theories as there now may be.

The officials well may be disturbed by the problem that faces them. If they abolish the flying field, the unthinking will laugh at them; if they don't, votes needed at the next election will be lost.

They Want the Dead Left Alone.

Something like unanimity marks the comment of the English papers on the proposed removal to America of whatever now is left of General OGLETHORPE. They distinctly do not like either the thing or the idea. Is it not enough, they ask, that Americans are buying up and carrying off home the most precious of England's treasures in the shape of pictures, old books and everything else valued by collectors and artists? Must they now loot British graves and take—without even paying for them!—the moldering bones of England's makers of history—her heroes and geniuses?

Whether this resentment is due to a really pious reverence for the dead and their resting places, or to a certain irritability which some Englishmen show when they see Americans do anything whatever, these days—that is a question not easily decided. It must be admitted, however, that they have a sort of right to see, as they do, some weakness in the claim made by the State of Georgia for the body of a man who to the end of his life remained an Englishman and would have been bitterly opposed to the participation of the colony he founded in the rebellion that cost his country so dear.

Buried in England are a good many other men who, like OGLETHORPE, had to do with colonies that later became American States, and if one of our colleges can "desecrate" a grave, there are lots more likely to demand the same privilege.

Very curious it is that in most of these London comments on the removal of General OGLETHORPE's body there is revealed something very much like belief that evil will follow, just as it did, they say, the invasion of TUT-ANKH-AMEN's tomb. British archaeologists laugh at such superstitious notions, but English editors evidently are inclined to think that there is some reason to apprehend the consequences of disturbing the sleep of the dead.

Birds Still Remain Indistinguishable.

Lieutenant JOHNSON made rather a mess of his first attempt to land his little airplane in a New York street.

Doubtless the thing can be done, by him or somebody else, if the feat is tried often enough, but while airplanes are made as now, with wings rigid and immovable, it is likely always to be a risky venture.

If only the aviators could do what the birds do a hundred times a day—that is, at will could lower their speed or stop it almost altogether for the necessary moment of alighting—then they, too, could come down, not only in any street, but on any roof, no matter how small or high. Even now the aviators make what, quite properly, are called "beautiful landings," but they must touch the ground while still moving at a speed rarely attained by other vehicles, and it is only on a long stretch of smooth, hard surface that the perils of descent are reduced to what for airmen seem negligible.

To give to aviators the bird's ability to put on aerial brakes would necessitate complications of airplane construction which, while theoretically quite possible, as yet in practice have been undertaken but half-heartedly and without success. A sparrow can alight on a telephone wire or the tip of a dahlia, seemingly without the slightest shock. It has, however, wings both more controllable and more controlled than are likely soon to be provided for human navigators of the air.

Sensitive It Sounds Unattractive.

In Paris, one-passenger taxicabs have been introduced, and are said to be cheap and therefore sure to be popular. Cheapness of anything, indeed, will be popular almost anywhere these days, but, judging from common observation, riding alone in a cab is far from as frequent as is their use with one or more companions, and doubts therefore arise as to any prompt and general acceptance of the Parisian innovation.

Apparently the new machine is not much more than a motorcycle, though provided with more wheels than two, or even three. It burns but little gasoline and is easy on tires, making a low fare practicable, but there can be no division of the expense, and none of the glory attainable by paying for somebody else, preferably feminine.

GERMAN IMPORT FIGURES.

Cotton and Copper for Several Countries Shipped to Hamburg.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

There seems to be something of a paradox about the figures of our sales of cotton and copper to Germany put forth by the Department of Commerce and widely published by the American press.

By these figures Germany is said to have purchased in August 70,200 bales of cotton and 9,850,045 pounds of copper, valued respectively at $9,896,187 and $1,440,319, and in the eight months 509,044 bales of cotton and 107,976,823 pounds of copper, valued at $72,566,183 and $17,861,717 respectively. She is also said to have paid cash for these purchases, which fact is cited as disproving assertions of Germany's bankruptcy and inability to pay reparations.

The figures of our entire trade with Germany in August and the eight months then ended recently put forth by the Department of Commerce show our total exports to Germany in the month to have been valued at $23,206,491 and imports to have been $15,776,660. In the eight months period they were respectively $161,995,388 and $104,706,249.

We are asked by the department to believe that these two commodities, cotton and copper, formed approximately half of our entire exports to Germany in the eight months period. Yet in another announcement given out by the department and published in the Wall Street Journal and other papers on the 11th it is stated:

"The German cotton textile industry is reported to be working at a maximum of three days a week. Spinners are substituting cheaper cotton for American wherever possible. This has resulted in receipts of Indian and of other non-American cotton at the port of Bremen for the past six months being increased fourfold, while receipts of American at Bremen equaled only two-thirds the quantity arrived during the same period of 1922. August receipts of non-American cotton, chiefly Indian, and of cotton waste at Hamburg totaled 56,000 bales, or approximately three-fourths the quantity of American cotton received at Bremen during that month."

The explanation of the statement of Germany's large imports is easily arrived at. For the past two years there have been published repeated statements of the revival of German trade as shown in the ship tonnage entering and clearing German ports, particularly Hamburg, without the explanation that a very large part—the greater part, probably—of Hamburg's trade is a transit trade and not German at all. It is well known that Trieste and Fiume are "dead" so far as the trade of the old Austro-Hungarian Empire is concerned. This is also true of the Russian ports. This trade, what there is left of it, is going through German ports, principally Hamburg.

Much of the cotton and copper entering German ports is destined for Czechoslovakia, Austria, Switzerland, Russia and perhaps other countries, and the German cotton industry is depressed.

Spanish of the Academy.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Lovers of pure English will surely have greatly enjoyed reading the three articles written by Dr. Robert Donald in The New York Times of Oct. 8, 9 and 10, and will pray to see the day when we shall have an Institute of English. In his assertion, however, that France is the "only nation which possesses an academic authority to watch over its language, cultivate a model style and set up a standard of excellence," he missed the fact that La Academia de la Lengua Espanola in Madrid performs exactly identical functions to attain the same aims, and it is due so it that Spanish has reached a degree of perfection higher than any other language, among other pedagogical objectives, in orthography especially, since any one knowing it never needs to go to the dictionary to find out how a word is written or spelled.

It is gratifying to see men like Dr. R. Donald advocating such an institute here, for America, with a population larger than any other nation speaking this language, will be most fitting to lead to make the language as natural, artistic and beautiful as it can be. R. DA TORRE.

Prohibition and Our Neighbors.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your correspondent "Indignant's" letter of Sept. 27 on the above subject is interesting. He is probably correct about "the trickling of debasing fluids into this country from Central America, Mexico, Panama and British Columbia." I agree that we insist on these arrogant breakers of our laws be arraigned unless they desist. That would be punishment indeed and be a great victory for the good cause of liberty. But why not annex Scotland, Ireland and other places where the pernicious stuff is manufactured?

AGE BECKONS ME!

Age beckons me; a home of spacious halls,
Where beauties now undreamed invite my stay.
Faces and scenes beloved adorn its walls,
No more, as now, to change—to fade away.

Through all its corridors and garden lanes
Perfumes and melodies, remembered, drift.
In sheltered corners will I find the fanes
Whose youthful worship were my soul's uplift.

There books which stirred me once await from me;
I will have learned which charms most truly please.
No more shall hurried hours serve as excuse
To keep me stranger to a thoughtful ease.

Perhaps life's pleasant tasks of grace and joy
Are waiting, too, those liberated hours,
When placing cares no more my hands employ,
When "must" and "ought" have lost their binding powers.

But best of all, a turret-chamber waits
To lead my vision outward, upward—far
Beyond sweet fields, sharp hills and homestead gates,
Past luring space itself, the soul's last star!

DROPS PANAMA SUBLEASE.

Weeks Announces Deal Will Not Be Made With Private Interests.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 12.—Secretary Weeks today announced that the Government has decided not to transfer under lease to private interests the wholesale activities of the Panama Railroad Company. The question has been before the War Department for nearly a year.

A proposal, said to have been made by Charles R. Stotz, representing financial interests in New York City, provided for the leasing of certain adjuncts of the Panama railway, including commissaries, a farm, pasturages and 40,000 head of cattle, warehouses, machine shops and so on, which are now operated by the Government.

The Government's decision, while the proposal of the New York interests has been described as "very attractive," followed a visit of Dr. Ricardo J. Alfaro, the Minister from Panama, to the White House. He protested against the sublease of railway property held by the United States under lease from Panama. President Coolidge made it plain to the Minister that the United States, under existing treaties, retains the powers of a sovereign in the Canal Zone.

The President added that this Government would not hesitate to state these powers to the fullest extent whenever they were called into question. He pointed out, however, that the Administration has no wish to exert those powers to their fullest extent, merely for the purpose of bringing in a small revenue to the United States Treasury, when such a stand would work an inconvenience upon the people of the Republic of Panama.

Secretary Weeks explained that the Government still believes it is desirable to separate Government operations from such activities, as many of those conducted by the Panama Railroad Company, but that changes that have been made in the original proposal for leasing have been so comprehensive in character and involve so many interests that it has been decided not to accept the proposal.

COOLIDGE LIMITS VISITS.

Restricts Them to Mornings, Leaving His Afternoons Free.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 12.—While public discussion continues as to why Presidents break down under the strain of their duties and as to means of relieving this strain, C. Bascom Slemp, secretary to President Coolidge, after a month in office, has evolved one plan for saving the strength of his chief.

Mr. Slemp has instituted a system by which engagements for conferences with the President are limited to the forenoon, and the whole afternoon is reserved for use by Mr. Coolidge in the study of reports and details of the problems before him and occasional conferences with Cabinet members. The system so far is said to have worked well and to leave the President much less fatigued at the end of the day than under the old system by which engagements were frequently scattered through the afternoon.

President Coolidge's daily working schedule starts at 8:30 o'clock, when he arrives at his office. He first goes over his mail and the morning papers, answering as much of his mail as is possible before the first callers having engagements arrive, about 10 o'clock. From that time on until 12:30 o'clock the President's time is taken up with ten to fifteen minute appointments, and it has been observed that rarely does he allow himself to get behind his schedule.

The final half hour before luncheon at 1 o'clock is taken up with the reception of delegations and individuals who call merely to shake hands with the President. About three-quarters of an hour is taken for luncheon and generally by 2 o'clock the President is back at his desk for a quiet afternoon of study, sometimes not broken once until he leaves the executive office shortly before 5 o'clock.

WON'T CALL BUSINESS MEN.

Coolidge Believes Conditions So Good That Conference Is Unnecessary.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 12.—Suggestions that President Coolidge call a conference of those concerned to consider business conditions in the country have made no impression on the President. It was said at the White House today that the President believed business conditions in general were so good that such a conference was not necessary.

The President, it was added to emphasize his position, had nothing of the kind in contemplation.

PLYMOUTH HONORS WARREN

Coolidge Message Read at Unveiling of Monument.

PLYMOUTH, Mass., Oct. 12.—A monument to the memory of General James Warren, Paymaster General of the Continental Army and President of the Massachusetts Provincial Congress, was unveiled on Burial Hill today by members of the Massachusetts Society, Sons of the American Revolution. The stone was designed by George F. Tilton.

A detail from the howitzer company of the 101st Infantry Regiment fired a major general's salute, and there were addresses by Arthur P. Sumner, of Rhode Island, President General of the Society of Colonial Wars; Lord Rennell, Pilgrim Society, and Charles F. Read, Chairman of the National Committee on the Warren Memorial.

A letter from President Coolidge, read at the exercises, congratulated the committee on the "good work in accomplishing the memorial."

"It is extremely worth while," the President's message said, "to keep the nation reminded of its debt to those who bore the great tasks of laying the foundations for its present power and security. Among these James Warren is entitled to a high place."

FIXES WORLD COURT WEEK.

Council Appeals to Churches to Observe It Nov. 5-11.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 12.—The commission on international justice and good-will of the Federal Council of Churches has issued a call to the churches of the country for the observance of the week from Nov. 5 to Armistice Day as World Court Week in the interest of American participation in the Permanent Court of International Justice.

The plan for a national campaign of education and discussion on the question, the Federal Council said in its announcement today, has been endorsed by religious, social and educational institutions throughout the country. In addition to an appeal for wide discussion of the issues by civic and commercial organizations during the week, all clergymen are asked to preach "on some phase of America's international responsibility and opportunity" on World Court Sunday, the last day of the observance.

"This commission of the Federal Council," it was said in the message to the churches, "believes that the churches heartily approve of American membership in the World Court, and earnestly desires the Senate to accept without mutilation or substantial modification the proposals of the late President Harding as formulated in his message to the Senate of last February."

It has become increasingly apparent, the commission adds, that the "full success of the Court depends upon its cordial support by the United States, and its success is most important for the hope of permanent peace throughout the world is vitally connected with the effective working of this Court."

CALLS ON ZANGWILL TO DEFEND JUDAISM

SEEKS THE CAUSE IN VAIN

Noted Dramatist Says Zionism "Is in the Bunker," and He Is the "Nibilek to Lift It Out."

The declaration that a phantom army of hate and bigotry against the Jewish race had sprung up all over the world was made by Samuel Untermyer, host at luncheon yesterday at the Hotel Commodore in honor of Israel Zangwill, the dramatist and novelist.

"Why attempt to blink the facts?" asked Mr. Untermyer. "The wise course is to face them so that we may make the better fight against this phantom army of hate. All over the world, even in this blessed free country of ours, we have fallen on evil times. One of those mysterious, unfathomable, ever-recurrent waves, blind and unreasonable, of racial and religious hatred and bigotry, of which history records so many aimed against our race, has crept over the world.

"In vain we seek a cause. A painstaking analysis of the relative usefulness of our men and women as citizens and workers in the countries where they dwell reveals no answer or explanation for the persecution which pursues us. There are many theories. One is that it is the result of the war, yet records show that the Jew mingled his blood freely with his fellow-countrymen, and in the arts of peace the Jew more than holds his own, for we are a peace-loving people. What is the remedy?"

Asks Zangwill to Answer.

In welcoming the guest, Mr. Untermyer said:

"At this particular time you are thrice welcome, not only because of the esteem in which we hold you, not only because you are deservedly in the very front rank of the distinguished men of our race, but we are justly proud of your useful and distinguished career, and we delight to honor you for the message you come to bring us at another crisis in the history of our people.

"Our distinguished guest agrees, I believe, that this hatred against the Jews is inherent from the war and expanding itself upon our people. Again I ask, Why is this? When the war was over the tombstones of Jewish districts showed they everywhere outnumbered their proportion of the population in every country. When we turn to the accounts of peace we find that in literature, arts, science, trade and professions in general the Jew is playing a worthy part.

"Let us hope that the distinguished guest will in due time on this visit expound his view of the cause. It may not be our view, but we feel sure, whether we may in the end agree or disagree with him, his mind is helpful in solving this problem will be invaluable to us.

"No better or greater Jew has lived in our day, and I know of no one who has done so much as he has by his word painting and pen pictures of the life and soul of the Jewish people, to bring about a better understanding concerning us."

Finds America Changed.

Mr. Zangwill, replying to Mr. Untermyer, said he believed that the alleged world hatred against the Jews could be analyzed on a Freudian basis, and he referred to Ford's anti-Semitic campaign in humorous terms.

"I will not try," said Mr. Zangwill, "to give at length the reasons why the Jews are so much disliked. One of my answers to Mr. Untermyer's queries is that it is a question of the dislike of the unlike. Those of my audiences who have read Freud will understand what I mean, for this eminent psychologist has gone profoundly into this aspect of the problem. After all, life is not logical, but psychological. I have written on the dislike of our race in my books. It is curious, though, how this persecution continues. For 1,000 years, for example, the Jewish race was quarreled with being the main prop of the greedy capitalist interests. Now the latest cry against us is that we have turned Bolsheviks.

"America today is not the America I wrote of in my books. The Melting Pot That America is gradually dwindling away. It is interesting to note that on this Columbus Day, which celebrates the discovery of this great country in 1492, thousands of Jews, whose descendants today play a leading role in the development of America, were being expelled from Spain, the native country of the discoverer.

"I will not say much about Mr. Untermyer's friend, Henry Ford, one of the leaders of the anti-Semite campaign in this country. I understand that his attacks on our race 'cut no ice' in this country. I have quite a friendly feeling toward Mr. Ford, and I can only believe that he has been enthusiastically misled. What I cannot grasp is why a man who is running for the Presidency runs away from Mr. Untermyer. If that is not true, why does Mr. Ford not accept service in the libel suit which Herman Bernstein, for whom Mr. Untermyer is acting, has brought against the motor car manufacturer?

"I am satisfied that if Mr. Untermyer wants to get Mr. Ford he will do so in the long run, as the Ford car is not the quickest. If it was not so serious it would be funny."

The Debt to Zionism.

Referring to anti-Semitism in France, Mr. Zangwill said there was a belief in certain quarters that the League of Nations was a Jewish institution. He cited a case where he had written that the League was the aspiration of every Jew. This, Mr. Zangwill said, was immediately turned by the anti-Semitic press into "Jewish inspiration." He said he had been amused by the fact that wherever he went, Lloyd George went, too. He said it had been charged that the former British Premier was in the hands of the Jews, and as Lloyd George during several European trips had arrived simultaneously, or just after he did, he had no doubt that the anti-Jews saw therein a gigantic conspiracy.

"I am not going to say much on Zionism," said Mr. Zangwill. "Zionism is in a very critical state, and I come here at a critical moment in the Zionist movement. I have been induced to play golf recently, and to that end motored to Zionism is in the bunker and I aim the niblick which is going to lift it out. We have a debt of charity to Zionism, and charity debts in my opinion, should be held as sacred as gambling debts used to be."

Among those present were Justice Irving Lehman, Samuel Greenbaum, Louis Wiley, Nathan Straus, Oscar S. Straus, Louis Marshall, the Rev. John Haynes Holmes, Rabb

SWISS TO PROTEST ENDING OF FREE ZONE

They Want Customs Dispute With France to Go to the World Court.

Copyright, 1923, by The New York Times Company.
Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

GENEVA, Oct. 12.—A great stir was caused in Switzerland today by the unexpected note of the French Government concerning the Savoy free zones, and by the announcement that on Nov. 20 the French customs would be established at the Swiss frontier in spite of the fact that the two countries have not yet come to an agreement on this question.

In February last the Swiss electorate refused the proposed convention relative to the free zone régime, so that the question had to be taken up again. It is true that the French Government never showed itself inclined to take any notice of this vote, on the ground that when the convention was drafted there was no question of its being submitted to popular ratification; that its ratification by the Swiss Parliament was sufficient, and that the convention was therefore to be enforced at once.

The Swiss Government states that a bill had been passed in Switzerland modifying the constitution and providing for international treaties the duration of which was more than fifteen years being submitted to popular ratification. The Federal Council had therefore to abide by the people's decision and could not put the convention into force.

The French Government showed its willingness to renew negotiations on this subject, but waited in vain for suggestions from the Swiss Federal Council, and lately had expressed its impatience to the Swiss Minister in Paris, M. Dunant, who came to Berne to consult the Federal Council.

On Oct. 10 M. Dunant communicated to the Quai d'Orsay draft proposals of the Swiss Government, and a French note, stating that the new free zones régime is to be enforced without delay, was handed to him at the same time.

The Federal Council examined the question today and decided to protest against this decision of the French Government and to propose to the latter that the whole question should be brought before the International Court of Justice at The Hague. If France, as the note declares, is ready to make every effort in order to maintain friendly relations with Switzerland, she cannot refuse to submit to arbitration this dispute on a very delicate question of international law, it is held here.

CHICAGO TO BROADCAST THE NEW TESTAMENT

Excerpts From Prof. Goodspeed's 'American Translation' Will Be a Sunday Radio Feature.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Oct. 12.—Beginning on Sunday evening, between 6:30 and 6:45 o'clock Westinghouse Station KYW will broadcast excerpts from the "American translation" of the New Testament by Professor Edgar J. Goodspeed. This feature was obtained by arrangement with the University of Chicago, with the permission of the author and publishers.

Believing that there are many persons in the United States who have not sufficient time to devote a part of it for a search of the meaning of the simple terms in which the Bible messages were first delivered, the directors of KYW arranged for this reading as a feature.

The "American translation" of the New Testament, in the language of today, is said to be a dignified, scholarly version that retains the vigor, ease and clarity of the original Greek. It is declared to be a reverent translation that removes the stumbling block of a vocabulary centuries old. It has been designed not only to tell Americans of today as ancient writers say, but to "make it easy and pleasurable for modern readers to turn to the greatest book in all literature."

William Ziegler Nourse has been selected to read the excerpts. He has appeared in roles in local theatres.

REV. DR. ALEXANDER IS HONORED AT 80

Pastor of First Presbyterian Church Dined by 500 Parishioners.

TRIBUTE FROM WHITMAN

Ex-Governor Credits Clergyman for Election—John A. Stewart, 101, Sends Letter.

The Rev. Dr. George Alexander, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, Fifth Avenue and Eleventh Street, was 80 years old yesterday and 500 of his parishioners gave a dinner in his honor last evening at the Waldorf-Astoria.

William M. Kingsley, an elder, was the toastmaster. He limited all but Dr. Alexander to five minutes and directed the speakers "to make snappy." The speakers were Deacon and ex-Governor Charles S. Whitman, Robert W. de Forest, a trustee; Dr. John P. Munn, an elder; Dr. John H. Finley, the Rev. Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick, the special Sunday morning preacher, the Rev. Thomas Guthrie Speers, associate pastor, and Mrs. Roger H. Williams, President of the Women's Society.

Dr. Alexander, who spoke last, was presented with a framed photograph of his mother by Dr. Finley who explained that it was a duplicate of a photograph of Mrs. Alexander which he had hung a few years ago in a small schoolhouse near Schenectady, N. Y., where as a young woman Mrs. Alexander had taught school.

A birthday cake bearing eighty lighted candles was brought in and cut by Dr. Alexander. As a souvenir each guest received a half-tone photograph of the guest of honor. Next to him sat Mrs. James Alexander of Schenectady, N. Y., his sister-in-law. Other relatives present were Mr. and Mrs. George C. Foote of Port Henry, N. Y.; Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Lockwood of Lambertsville, N. Y., and Judge John Alexander of Schenectady, a nephew.

Mr. Kingsley said that there was a common impression that the crowds which overflowed the First Church every Sunday came to hear Dr. Fosdick preach, but, he added, he had been superintending some straw votes and "33 per cent. are young women who want to shake Guthrie by the hand who is a bachelor, 33 come to hear Dr. Fosdick and 34 per cent. come because they think Dr. Alexander is the finest man God ever made." Dr. Kingsley read a letter from John A. Stewart, who was 101 years old recently.

Ex-Governor Whitman said that he had been a member of Dr. Alexander's church thirty years. "The Doctor is too truthful to deny the beautiful things which have been said about him here this evening, and he is too modest to admit them," said Mr. Whitman. "And all this affection and love he has earned."

"New York is not perfect, but you can't tell what it would have been but for him and men like him. "I think it was because I kept close to Dr. Alexander that I was elected Governor of New York. The reason I was not elected the third time was because I was away from him for four years. You see it did not take me long to get back. I recommend young men who are ambitious in public life to stay close to Dr. Alexander. He is never going to be old to us. He bears eternal sunshine in his his soul."

DOCTORS WHO SCOFFED NOW HAIL VORONOFF

French Surgical Congress Receives Reports of Success in Gland Transplanting.

Copyright, 1923, by The New York Times Company.
Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Oct. 12.—Dr. Serge Voronoff, who last year was hooted down at the surgical congress when he rose to read a communication on his work in gland grafting, faces a changed medical opinion. Not only has the first session of this year's surgical congress applauded the progress in transplanting interstitial glands, but today Dr. Voronoff performed the operation on his two confrères who are attending the congress. Tomorrow he will operate on two others and on Sunday four surgeons will perform operations under his direction.

The champions of the gland operation, of which Dr. Voronoff was the precursor, are Dr. Bartigues, former chief of a clinic at the Academy of Medicine and Vice President of the Society of Surgeons, and Dr. Baudet, a surgeon in Paris hospitals. In a communication to the surgical congress Dr. Bartigues stated that forty-four of the operations had been performed since June, 1920, by Drs. Voronoff, Baudet, Back of London and himself, all with beneficial results.

Dr. Baudet described operations on a professor who had asked for retirement, an industrialist who had been forced to give up business, an engineer who was unable to work more than half an hour daily and a writer who was unable to work at. All four of these men, it was said, now had the restored mental activity of youth.

Both communications received unanimous homage from the same assembly which had hooted Dr. Voronoff from the stage when he tried to explain away a technicality on which he was barred from speaking.

Both the doctors mentioned the growing scarcity of the chimpanzee. The animal which is the only one with blood identical with that of a human being is almost wiped out. Big game hunters are partly responsible, but the vanity of women who require monkey fur for costumes has led to great inroads.

So scarce have chimpanzees become that the Governor of French West Africa has issued an ordinance protecting them. The Pasteur Institute has sent Dr. Vulbert to Africa to establish a farm to raise them. The price, which is indicative of the supply, has risen from 1,000 francs in 1914 to 8,000 francs.

BEATTY MENTIONED FOR AMBASSADOR HERE

Another Report Says Sir Eustace Fiennes May Be Appointed if Geddes Resigns.

LONDON, Oct. 12.—A rumor that Earl Beatty, First Sea Lord of the Admiralty, is to be offered the British ambassadorship at Washington in succession to Sir Auckland Geddes is current in naval circles. According to The Daily Mirror the story is that the authorities want the Earl out of the way because of his strong opposition to the proposal for a reduction in the pay of the navy in 1924.

Another report that Sir Eustace Fiennes, Governor of the Leeward Islands, is likely to replace Sir Auckland appears in The Daily Sketch. This newspaper asserts, however, that the Ambassador's health has so much improved that he probably will return to Washington in December, although the possibility that he will not gives ground for speculation as to his successor.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 12.—While reports reaching Washington as to whether Sir Auckland Geddes will return here as Ambassador of Great Britain are conflicting, officials understand that his health has improved sufficiently to permit him to resume his duties at this capital and there is expectation that he will come back.

When Sir Auckland Geddes left Washington for England on leave of absence he was suffering severely from trouble with his eyes and it was believed that he had lost the sight of one of them. The improved information reaching Washington is that the impaired eye has been saved and there is great improvement in the Ambassador's general health. It is admitted, however, that officials have no definite information as to whether Sir Auckland Geddes will retain the American mission.

RAILWAY EXECUTIVES AT PETERS FUNERAL

Traffic on the Long Island Stilled for Two Minutes During Services in Garden City.

Impressive evidence of the esteem in which Ralph Peters was held by the railroad men of the country was given yesterday morning at his funeral in the Cathedral of the Incarnation at Garden City. Practically every railroad executive of prominence who could make the journey was there to pay his respects to the friend and the President who had directed the development of the Long Island for the last eighteen years. Dean Oscar F. P. Treder conducted the services and Bishop Burgess pronounced the benediction. Burial was in St. John's Memorial Cemetery at Cold Spring Harbor, L. I.

Every rank of railroad life was represented at the services. Five hundred employes accompanied fifty-two executives of the Long Island Railroad to the church and promptly at 11:15 9,000 other employes of the road bowed their heads for two minutes in prayer. For that period not single train moved, not a ticket was sold, not a tool used in the shops, not a ferryboat moved, no business of any kind was transacted.

In addition to the members of the Peters family among those present were Samuel Rea, Julius Krutschnitt, E. B. Loomis, Judge Robert S. Lovett, W. G. Bessler, Sir Henry W. Thornton, L. F. Loree, R. H. Aishton, W. H. Truesdale, Frederick Underwood, W. W. Atterbury, Judge C. B. Heisermann, Francis L. Gowen, C. Stuart Patterson, August Belmont, H. L. Pratt, Walter E. Frew, Morgan J. O'Brien, A. C. Bedford, Frank Hedley, P. A. S. Franklin, H. H. Vreeland, George Le Boutillier and F. B. Wiborg.

FINANCIAL MARKETS

Holiday Yesterday on Stock and Commodity Exchanges—European Prices Irregular.

All financial and commercial markets were closed in this and other American cities yesterday, and there were no quotations. On the London and Paris stock markets, prices moved irregularly and uncertainly, but even the sterling rate at Paris did not change from the day before.

On the Stock Exchange this has been distinctly a week of falling prices. It followed, however, a week of rising prices and that week was preceded by one of great confusion in the movement. The prevalent impression in Wall Street is that the movement has been steadily downward, and so it has been in a number of active stocks. But THE TIMES's "averages," which ought fairly to reflect the general movement, show an advance from 78.33 two weeks ago today to 81.20 last week and a decline from that to 78.94 at Thursday's closing. This is neither a very wild variation nor a consecutive movement in one direction. Even the bulletins of advice and prophecy, issued by Stock Exchange commission houses to their customers, have pointed every day in opposite directions.

There are still a good many earmarks of a market which cannot make up its mind on the situation. On the other hand, there is doubtless a large body of speculative opinion which holds that a market which hesitates because of doubt will naturally go lower, and it is apparently on this theory that the present week's speculative operations have been conducted. If the doubts had begun to prevail at the top of a long advance, the theory would be incontestable; what causes the present uncertainty is that the inability to read the financial future has come after a fifteen-point average decline.

In such a position of things the real trend of financial markets is usually determined by actual events, or by clear expert judgment as to what those events will be. We have had the progressive monthly decrease from last Spring in the steel and iron output and in the forward orders of the steel trade; those incidents of the news were expected by experienced financiers six months ago and were duly reflected in the downward course of the stock market. If there should now occur a rapid fall in commodity prices as a whole, for instance, that would be something new. But no such decline occurs; commodity prices move forward and backward in much the same way as prices on the Stock Exchange.

A sudden decrease in railway earnings, beyond the ordinary variations of a season, would create new points of view, and it is natural enough to expect some considerable falling off in "loadings" and net returns as a result of the known decrease in orders for merchandise and production in certain industries. Yet even this would be a necessary sequel to perfectly well-known events. Home or foreign politics might take an alarming turn, but as yet home politics are very much what they were when the stock market was approaching the high point of the year last February and March, and foreign politics are governed by the German position, which in some ways promises a longer step toward solution of the vexed question of European relations than has occurred since the early months of 1923.

Perhaps the most reasonable conclusion to reach at the present time is that the financial community is still digesting its disappointment over the non-fulfillment of the predictions of an Autumn "boom in trade" in which Wall Street indulged last Spring. Granting this, the real problem of financial astrologers is to determine what kind of trade will be left when the reaction from an abnormal trade activity is completed. This is presumably what the stock market is trying to guess.

FOREIGN STOCK MARKETS.

Prices Irregular Yesterday—Exchange Rates Little Altered.

LONDON, Oct. 12.—Prices were irregular on the Stock Exchange today. Old 2½ per cent. consols unchanged at 56⅝. British 5 per cent. war loan ⅛ higher at 102⅞, 4½ per cent. war loan ⅛ higher at 99⅛.

Rand Mines 2⅜, De Beers Mining 12⅛, both unchanged.

PARIS, Oct. 12.—Prices moved irregularly on the Bourse today. Three per cent. rentes 5 centimes higher at 55 francs 95 centimes; 5 per cent. war loan 2⅝ centimes lower at 74 francs 40 centimes.

Exchange on London 74 francs 70 centimes to the sovereign, unchanged from yesterday; American dollars 16 francs 41½ centimes against 16.44.

AUSTRIAN CURRENCY PLANS.

Possibility of Reducing Denominations of the Paper Money.

The London Economist hears from Vienna that the question of creating a new currency will soon be discussed. This could be effected by introducing a krone which would represent 1,000 or even 10,000 times the present krone.

Such action, it is stated from Vienna, "would at least make it unnecessary to continue counting in millions."

MONEY.

Domestic money markets were closed for holiday yesterday, and there were no quotations. Thursday's closing rates: Call loans 4½ per cent., time loans 5¼, commercial paper 5@5½ per cent. for best names, 5¾ for others.

London Market.

Money in London ¼ lower at 2⅝ per cent.; short bills unchanged at 2 1-16@2 per cent.; three months' bills unchanged at 3⅛ per cent.

Gold bullion 1 penny higher, at 90s 7d per fine ounce. Taking the British Mint standard price of 85s per fine ounce as par, the market quotation of gold would represent a price of 105⅞ at London. On the same basis the highest London price for gold for the year to date was 107½, on Sept. 5. The highest price since open trading in gold was resumed at London in September, 1919, was 140⅝, on Feb. 6, 1920; the lowest, 102½, on Feb. 21, 1922. Highest price last year, 134, on Jan. 3.

Great Northern's New Board.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Oct. 12.—All officers and Directors of the Great Northern Railway were re-elected at the annual stockholders' meeting here yesterday.

Joseph Chapman, Minneapolis business man and former banker, and Fred D. Fairchild were elected to fill vacancies on the Board of Directors.

SILVER BULLION.

Bar silver in London ¼ penny lower yesterday at 31½ pence per ounce. New York silver market closed; Thursday's price 63⅝ cents.

LONDON'S LOAN ISSUES SMALLEST SINCE 1914

Decrease in Post Quarter—Nine-Month Total Above Pre-War Figure.

New security issues in England for the September quarter, which footed up to £25,381,000, were the smallest of any three-month period since the third-quarter of 1914. They compared with £95,050,100 in the second quarter of the present year, with £41,920,000 in the September quarter of 1922, and with a high quarterly total of £286,207,100, reached in the first three months of last year.

The total of new loans placed in the nine completed months of 1923 was £306,852,000, as against £310,604,400 in the corresponding period of 1922 and £186,465,100 in 1921. The decrease as compared with 1922 was mostly due to the large reduction in issue of British Government loans, which were less by £301,282,000 than in the nine-month period last year. This year's placing of new securities for states in the British empire outside of England actually increased £4,458,000 over 1922, and were larger by £24,067,000 and £5,610,000 respectively than in the same nine months of 1912 and 1913.

As bearing on the supply of available investment capital in England, the returns show that the total of new securities subscribed to in the nine months was £56,361,000 greater than in 1913 and £50,651,000 greater than in 1912.

METAL MARKET WEAK.

Silver Declines and Lead and Zinc Are "None Too Strong."

Price levels in the non-ferrous metal markets have been somewhat lower during the last week. Copper has been particularly weak, despite some business at the 13-cent level. Lead and zinc prices, on the other hand, have been pretty well maintained, but according to the Engineering and Mining Journal-Press the undertone is none too strong. Silver has reverted to around 63 cents after a spurt to 65 cents for a few days, and in the opinion of this publication there is slightly more hope of an early settlement in the Ruhr, "which would, without doubt, have a good effect on the metal markets."

Regarding the copper market the Journal-Press says:

"It is reported that shipments of copper in September were from 30,000,000 to 40,000,000 pounds less than the production. Too much weight should not be given to this, however, unless the condition continues for two or three months, for consumers' inventories without doubt decreased. There is no doubt that the brass business has experienced a pronounced slump, but the wire and cable manufacturers continue to work to capacity and are taking a surprising amount of copper."

ANALYZES STOCK MARKET.

Downward Trend is Halted by Autumn Trade, Says Moody's Review.

The investing public is not rich enough to buy stocks on a large scale, nor poor enough to sell, and so it is that the market is doing little or nothing, according to Moody's Weekly Review of Financial Conditions, which points out that since last Spring the main trend of prosperity has been slightly downward, but is now temporarily interrupted by the Autumn trade. The Review adds:

"There is nothing like conservatism to pave the way for a bull movement. Growing unemployment, even if the growth is slow, leads to lower operating costs; and a flat 1 per cent. cut in all operating expenses would probably increase our saving available for investment in securities by 30 to 50 per cent. Hence if this shortage of capital disappears some time next year, as it may well do, the stock market should respond."

Milling Bonds Sold to New York.

BISMARCK, N. D., Oct. 12.—The North Dakota State Industrial Commission has sold $850,000 of mill and elevator and milling bonds to R. M. Grant & Co. of New York at par and premium of $4,000, it was announced here today.

WEEK'S NEW BONDS TOTAL $42,744,000

Railroad Financing Leads With Two Issues Aggregating $18,625,000.

$7,275,000 FOR UTILITIES

State and Municipal Securities Offered Amount to $9,194,000—Business in Better Volume.

New bond offerings this week virtually parelled the previous week, the totals having been $42,744,000 this week, against $43,238,000. In both weeks, railroad financing led all others. Both weeks were far above the figures for the two preceding weeks, but still lower than those of the corresponding period last year. By groups the record follows:

	This Week.	Last Week.
State and municipal	9,194,000	8,478,000
Public utility	7,275,000	10,500,000
Foreign	6,000,000	.....
Industrial	1,350,000	.....
Totals	$42,744,000	$42,238,000

The railroad issues were quickly subscribed, according to announcements of the underwriting groups. The larger of the two was for $10,000,000 Kansas City Terminal Railway Company 5¼ per cent. secured gold notes. The other issue amounted to $8,625,000 of Great Northern Railway Company 5 per cent. equipment trust certificates. The absorption of these issues tended to stimulate activity in the bond market and bankers said they were preparing to bring forth some new issues in fairly substantial volume.

The bulk of inquiries is for the accounts of public utility companies and most of these prospective pieces of business are in units of from $2,000,000 to $5,000,000.

Oil companies have also been making inquiries in anticipation of heavy storage demands over the Winter. Bankers say they would not hesitate to bring out new issues for the stronger oil companies and that despite the difficulties encountered by a number of companies due to overproduction last Summer they expect no difficulty in providing for oil company needs.

With bond business in better volume bankers appear more confident as to the future. One officer of an underwriting syndicate said that caution would be necessary to guard against bringing out too many issues at once, but that there was excellent reason to expect that the rest of this year and part of next would find an unusually active market here.

WOOL TRADE MORE ACTIVE.

Prices Maintained, but Little Changed—Firm Foreign Markets.

BOSTON, Oct. 12.—The Commercial Bulletin will say tomorrow:

"The demand for wool has become more active again this week following the lull of a week ago and prices are generally well maintained, especially on the lower qualities. Fine and fine medium wools are possibly not quite so firm, but on the whole the market has shown no material change for the week. Demand has been fairly well diversified, although some medium foreign wool has been dull. The goods market is hardly changed. Fall Texas wools are moving slowly, without any particular change in prices.

"The foreign markets are all very firm. Australia has been generally steady this week, with good wools firm in Sydney, although inferior wools have been slightly irregular."

London Metal Market.

LONDON, Oct. 12.—Standard copper, spot, £60 5s; futures, £61. Electrolytic, spot, £64; futures, £64 10s. Tin, spot, £201 7s 6d; futures, £199 7s 6d. Lead, spot, £26 10s; futures, £25 16s. Zinc, spot, £31 17s 6d; futures, £31 10s.

FRANCS STRONGER IN LONDON MARKET

Negotiations With Germany Are Expected Later—Stocks Show Firmness.

Copyright, 1923, by The New York Times Company.
Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Oct. 12.—Premier Poincaré's refusal to enter into direct negotiations with the German Government on the question of resuming work in the Ruhr was considered on today's market as endangering Stresemann's position, but the refusal to negotiate is expected to be withdrawn when passive resistance finally ceases. This aspect of the situation caused some strengthening of francs today when the rate on Paris, after touching 75¾ francs to the pound, fell to 74¾. Similar movements occurred in Belgian francs which closed 57¾ against 58¼ last night. Lire rose in sterling value in sympathy.

German marks were nominal at 22,000 millions to the pound sterling compared with yesterday's worst point of 20,000 millions. The whole exchange market remained, however, in an extremely feverish condition, with sterling depressed by nothing worse than seasonal purchases of dollars or Autumn imports from America.

The usual Friday ease developed in the money market, where discounts weakened on the allotment of £35,000,000 Treasury bills at an average discount of 5⅛ per cent. which was below expectations and is the same as last week.

The stock markets were very quiet today but the tone generally speaking was firm. Oil shares sold off on reports of further immediate reduction of petrol prices, which would bring motor fuel down to or below the pre-war levels.

There is little or no foundation for the talk of an early issue of a Japanese loan here. The best opinion is that there will be no issue until Japan has accomplished a good deal more in the way of reconstruction. Her chances of borrowing on satisfactory terms would then be considerably enhanced.

TRADE IMPROVEMENT IN ITALY INDICATED

Notable Increase in Railway Traffic the Most Promising Sign.

In Italy, our Department of Commerce reports in its last bulletin, "the usual Fall revival in trade has not yet taken place, but rising imports of raw materials indicate an increase in industrial activity over 1922. Merchants and consumers' stocks are small, affording hope for improvement in demand. Railway traffic is increasing and the revival in building activity is maintained. Crops have proved larger than the preliminary estimates.

"Railway-car loading in Italy has increased until it exceeds the pre-war average. The total freight tonnage from July, 1923 to May, 1923, amounted to 39,000,000 tons—an increase of 16 per cent. over the previous year. The traffic in the port of Genoa in the first eight months of 1923 amounted to 4,000,000 tons—a considerable increase over 1922.

"The Commissioner of the railways reports that satisfactory progress is being made in reorganizing the State railway system and in reducing the number of employes. Increases have been authorized in freight and passenger rates, which are expected to yield 100,000,000 lire annually."

Brokers' Cashiers to Have Dinner.

The cashiers' section of the Association of Stock Exchange Firms will have a beefsteak dinner on the evening of Oct. 27 at the Hofbrau House, Broadway and Thirtieth Street. Subscription warrants have been issued entitling each diner to one "beefsteak preferred" at the rate of $5 a share.

PROPOSALS FOR NEW GERMAN CURRENCY

London Banking House Gives Outline of the Berlin Ministry's Proposals.

THREE KINDS OF MARKS

Capital and Reserve of the Proposed New Bank of Issue Will Consist of Land Mortgages.

As outlined by international banking houses in London, the plan of the Stresemann Ministry for a new German currency makes the following provisions:

Agriculture, industry, trade and banking shall provide means for the creation of a currency bank—"Waehrungsbank"—which will issue the new money in form of a "ground-mark" or "boden-mark." The capital of the bank will be 2,400,000,000 "ground-marks," of which half will be supplied by agriculture and the other half by industry, trade and banking. The bank will be tax free and independent of the State, but the nomination of its President will be sanctioned by the Government. Part of the capital will be raised in the form of first mortgages, equaling 3 per cent. of the gold mark valuation of agricultural land in 1913.

These mortgages will be in gold marks of 0.358 grams of fine gold, and will bear 6% per cent. interest. The other part will be a charge on industry and trade, the share of each concern to be apportioned by the respective industrial and trade organizations. Where an industrial concern owns its own land, its share will be in the form of a mortgage equal to 3 per cent. of the capital value. Shareholders in the currency bank will be the contributories in proportion to their contributions.

The currency bank will issue 5 per cent. mortgage bonds on security of its mortgages and use these bonds as cover for its issue of "ground-marks." A "ground-mark" will contain 100 ground-pfennigs. The bank is obliged on demand to convert its "ground-mark" issues into mortgage bonds, and similarly to pay out "ground-marks" on delivery of a corresponding sum in mortgage bonds. The bank will do business only with the republic. It is authorized during the next two years to advance the republic money up to a total of two milliard "ground-marks," after which the bank will be liquidated.

Of the bank's net profit a sum of 3 per cent. on the mortgages will be paid to the contributing shareholders. Of the remainder three-fourths will be an amortization fund. Immediately afterfoundation, the bank will advance 300,000,000 "ground-marks" to the republic, which will be used for redemption of the discounted Treasury bills, which represents the floating debt the Reichsbank being required to devote the sum so received to conversion of the present paper issues at a ratio yet to be fixed.

The London foreign exchange house of Samuel Montagu & Co. comments thus on the plan in its weekly bulletin: "It is proposed for a time three different kinds of marks will be in circulation; the present paper mark, the note of the new Bank of Issue and the gold note of the Reichsbank. Meanwhile, during the transition period, the army of Government officials, the railways and postal services will require to be paid and unemployment hitherto negligible is increasing. It is reported that between three and four thousand factories have been closed in Saxony alone, and all over the country large numbers of workmen are under notice. It is estimated that by the end of the month the number of unemployed will have risen to 2,000,000, who will have to be fed.

"Money of some kind will be required to satisfy demands in these and other directions and the Government will not have the Reichsbank to fall back upon for the discounting of Treasury bills. The new scheme of taxation, if it becomes operative, should make a radical improvement in the revenue."

GOOD WEEK IN DRY GOODS.

Current Sales Exceed Year Ago—Road Orders Satisfactory.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Oct. 12.—Marshall Field & Co., in their weekly review of the wholesale dry goods trade, say:

"Current wholesale distribution of dry goods was greater than last week and exceeded the figures of 1923 for the same week.

"The volume of road sales showed a decided increase over last week and approximated very closely the total of a year ago for the corresponding period. "There were more customers in the market than during the same week last year.

"Collections were slightly less than during the corresponding period of 1922."

BUILDING COSTS STEADIER.

This Is Given as Cause for Increase in Construction.

The increase in construction in September was due to the apparent stabilization of costs during the last four months, according to the Engineering News-Record, which points out that skilled labor costs have risen, but basic materials prices have shown little change. The current issue of the publication says:

"Had this lack of change been due to stagnation instead of stabilization, there could not have been an increase in the volume of construction. Nearly all classes of construction gained in value of contracts let, with the exception of industrial buildings."

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

Markets Closed for the Holiday.

All markets were closed for the holiday yesterday. Today's brief half-holiday market is expected by Wall Street to amount to little more than an evening up of commitments over the week-end. Trading in all markets is not particularly heavy at the moment except for the out-and-out speculative account. Rather curious turns have recently been taken by several of the markets in which speculation is heavy. The Stock market, for instance, is at about the low points of the year. Commodity markets, on the other hand, are a little firmer. Wheat has advanced approximately 14 cents from the year's low, corn is at approximately the year's high, and cotton within three or four cents of the best price for the year. The continued decline in the security markets, in the face of quiet strength in the commodities, has further served to cloud business and commercial opinion, which looks to both kinds of markets for a clue to the immediate future.

***

A Stockholder's Opinion.

"The thing I like about these holidays," remarked one disappointed stockholder yesterday, "is that they form red-letter days, in which your stock has no opportunity to decline. That's something."

$42,744,000 in New Bonds.

The weekly record of new financing as compiled by THE NEW YORK TIMES indicates the offerings here during the week ended yesterday a total of $42,726,000 of new issues. This figure compares with $43,238,000 the previous week and greatly exceeds the two preceding lean weeks in which the strike of newspaper pressmen contributed materially to a lessened amount of bond business. While the two figures for October cannot be accepted as conclusive as regards a return to more active bond markets, they are at least significant in that they show a fairly sharp and apparently fairly well sustained revival in new financing and reports from investment bankers would seem further to indicate that much new business remains on the 1923 program, although only a few extremely large blocks of bonds are to be brought out. In the two preceding weeks railroad financing led all others. There is still a good demand for railroad bonds, but principal inquiries at the moment are reported to be for the accounts of public utility companies, a number of which are coming into the market within the next few weeks.

***

A Foreign Judgment.

Recognizing that in the United States "there has been a moderate curtailment of production during recent months," The London Economist's review of the state of home and foreign trade, published at the end of September, nevertheless remarks that "the United States is perhaps the only country in the world which can be described as 'prosperous' at the moment."

***

Railroad Dividend Prospects.

While the action of the Board of Directors of the Southern Railway on Thursday destroyed, for the time being at least, one of the grounds for hope of a "dividend revival" on railroad shares, it did not kill off all the rumors of such dividends. Among those most prominently discussed are the Wabash A and the Chesapeake & Ohio. On the latter the suggestion is being noised about the financial district that the board will see fit at the November meeting to increase the present dividend from 4 to 6 per cent. Other railroads were being mentioned last week, and railroad executives refer to letters from all parts of the country asking about dividend prospects. The more conservative among these executives point out that, while there are a number of roads that could afford at present to go on a dividend-paying basis or to increase the dividends they are now paying, the whole question simmers down to whether 1923 can be taken as an average year. If this is the case many companies can afford higher dividends. But if it is to be assumed that earnings of the railroads will not be as favorable next year, then many executives believe that the roads will do better to put their surplus earnings away for "future reference."

Another Market Puzzle.

It is a subject of comment in retail merchandising circles that while the common stocks of the three large mail order houses have fallen nearly 27 per cent. below the high point reached last March, the sales of these concerns promise to set a new record this year. The non-responsiveness of the stock market to the news is again clearly demonstrated, as the concerns in question showed sales increases in the first nine months of the year ranging from 14.83 to 51.60 per cent., compared with the same period last year, whereas the market value of their common stocks is now about 7 per cent. under the July, 1923, lows. Comparison with chain store figures makes the situation still more puzzling. Instead of declining, the chain store stocks have moved to the highest point on record, being more than 7 per cent. above the March highest, and this in a stock market of relatively narrow fluctuations. One theory heard in Wall Street is that the relatively greater expansion that has characterized the chain store business as compared with the mail order business doubtless may have had something to do with bringing about this discrepancy. But in point of actual achievement the race to the end of the year is a close one.

Demand for Commercial Paper.

A fairly substantial increase in the demand for commercial paper has been reported by bankers, particularly in interior regions where, it appears, money has been released largely from agricultural burdens and is now seeking another outlet. Rates on commercial paper still continue steadily firm at 5¼ per cent. for prime names and 5¾ per cent. for other names, the bulk of transactions being at the higher rate. Industry is obviously going forward very slowly, but, according to bankers, the money condition is now such that considerable wealth could be diverted into this channel without causing any serious stringency, the general money market having improved substantially in the last two weeks.

Whether the farmer as a class is in a serious condition financially, as was insisted a few weeks ago by many exports who were urging the relief of the agricultural community, is a question that is still agitating the minds of investors, bankers and business men; but conclusions more recently obtained have lean apparently to a much more hopeful view of the entire situation. Statistics recently compiled adduce the fact that wheat production—the one point on which concern was most greatly felt—amounts to only 8 per cent. of the country's total production and therefore could not mean disaster even if the more gloomy prospects were to develop into realities. Subsequently, Senator Capper and other representatives of the farm population have come forward with figures that are particularly striking. the Kansas Senator, for instance, stating that the farm output this year will prove $1,000,000,000 more valuable than in the previous year. Tending to confirm this analysis is the fact that mail order business, which caters chiefly to the farm population, is increasing substantially.

DYE PATENTS CASE IN JUDGE'S HANDS

Final Arguments Are Made in Government Suit to Rescind Sale to Chemical Foundation.

WILL GO TO HIGHER COURT

Federal Counsel Denies Attacking Wilson or Polk, and Drops One Charge Against Palmer.

Special to The New York Times.

WILMINGTON, Del., Oct. 12. — The equity suit of the Government against the Chemical Foundation, Inc., passed into the hands of Federal Judge Morris for judgment this evening, when five days of argument supplementary to a seven-week trial ended.

With Judge Morris now rests the decision as to whether the German dye and chemical patents seized by the Alien Property Custodian and sold in 1919 to the Foundation shall remain with that corporation, or, as demanded by the Government, shall be returned to the Custodian. It is understood that the final decision will rest with the Supreme Court.

The day was given over to summing up for the Government by Colonel Henry W. Anderson, Special Assistant Attorney General, and comments on legal issues by William D. Guthrie and Isidor J. Kresel, counsel for the defense.

Colonel Anderson informed the Court that the Government did not assail former President Wilson, though the defense had so interpreted the Government's case. Likewise, he said, there was no attack on former Under-Secretary of State Frank L. Polk, these officials being criticized only from the standpoint of possible legal error in their authorization of the sale.

Withdraws Part of Brief on Palmer.

Early in the session Colonel Anderson withdrew certain sections of the Government brief relating to Palmer. This started a lively discussion between opposing counsel and led to comments by Judge Morris on other paragraphs relating to Mr. Palmer's conduct. The Court called attention to this paragraph in the Government brief:

"A reading of the evidence of Mr. Palmer will show that, if he stated the facts to the President as he testified he stated them, many facts were stated in direct conflict with what actually took place."

This had been interpreted by the defense as an accusation of perjury against Mr. Palmer. Judge Morris also referred to this Government paragraph:

"That which Mr. Palmer was appointed to conserve he testifies that he deliberately destroyed. The trust with which he was charged for the conservation of property, to the end that Congress might discharge the international obligations of this nation after the war, he deliberately perverted to 'selfish ends.' Now he seeks to justify these acts on the ground he was using the property of the trust to promote the development of private industry and advance the material and commercial interests of the United States."

Colonel Anderson said of this paragraph that Mr. Palmer perverted the property to "selfish ends" in that he "turned it to the advantage of the manufacturers."

"Scratches Out" One Charge.

At the close of the case tonight, when the point was pressed again by Judge Morris, Colonel Anderson said that he was willing to "scratch out" the allegation that Mr. Palmer "deliberately perverted" the property to "selfish ends," expressing surprise that the phrase had been interpreted as meaning that he had converted the property to his own purposes.

"You stand here as the Attorney General," Judge Morris observed. "You are dealing with your predecessor in office. The question is one of judicial propriety, and the Court has certain duties and powers in the situation. When you are dealing with an ordinary person, that is one thing. When you are dealing with your predecessor in office, that is another."

Colonel Anderson said the brief did not intend to allege that Mr. Palmer was untruthful, but that certain inferences were drawn from contemporaneous documentary evidence that led the Government to believe Palmer was mistaken. He said the Government held merely that the President, Polk, Palmer, Garvan and the others had acted under misconceptions.

"I understand that you would be the last to question your predecessor's veracity," said the Court, "particularly under the circumstances of this case that you make no charge of wilful and deliberate intent by the Attorney General previously holding office to violate his trust."

Colonel Anderson asserted this view was correct.

Denies Attacking Wilson.

Of the defense's complaint that the Government brief assailed President Wilson by practically charging him with crime, the Colonel said:

"Nothing we have said should be construed as a criticism of the President or of Mr. Polk. We intended to indicate that the matter was an error of law, and to explain how an error of law will arise even among men of the highest character and caution. There was no intent to reflect in any way on the President."

"Do you find any instance in American history," inquired Judge Morris, "in which similar language was used by a successor in office with respect to a predecessor in office? I assume the language is used purposely, and not used purposely in absence of full and convincing evidence which would warrant its use.

"I would be glad to have you take such time as you like to cite cases constituting a precedent for such language. We will sit as late as necessary tonight to give you time to point out evidence which would carry conviction to a reasonable mind of the accuracy of the statements with respect to the former Attorney General."

"If statements in the brief are unsupported I shall be glad to modify and retract them," Colonel Anderson replied.

"I propose not to take the burden on myself as to what counsel shall do or shall not do within the bounds of propriety," said Judge Morris. "It is only when the bounds of propriety are exceeded that my power shall be exercised."

Colonel Anderson took exception to the defense's criticisms of the Government's attorneys, intimating that they were made to distract attention from the weakness of the defense.

Argues That Sale Is Void.

"A sale by a Government officer to himself has been held by the Supreme Court to be void," said Colonel Anderson, relative to his argument that President Garvan of the Foundation bought the patents from himself as Custodian. No officer of the Government can abrogate or suspend the law.

"The Trading With the Enemy act would be unconstitutional if it were construed as authorizing confiscation. If it be held in this case that the power to determine on a confiscation is vested in an executive officer, together with the power to determine the use of the confiscation, then the act is unconstitutional.

"It has been claimed here the President had power as dictator to determine what to do with the property. If this act is given such construction, it is unconstitutional as a delegation of legislative power to an executive officer. It would create a dictator in whom are merged the legislative and executive powers, and what would be the most marvelous office in the history of the world. The act would be further unconstitutional in the application of the property to a class for the benefit of private purposes."

Judge Morris, in colloquy with Colonel Anderson, pointed out that the patents originally held by Germans were monopolistic when thus held, and that these patents were seized by the American Government.

"That this is a violation of the monopoly statutes passes my immediate comprehension, said the Judge, "but I shall consider it. If this act was in violation of the Sherman act, what would have been the extent of the violation if there had been no restrictions on this sale to the Foundation?

"If the custodian or President or both had sold the patents to you, would the custodian or would you have violated the Sherman act? If that did not violate the Sherman act, how much less must this sale be in violation of the Sherman act, with all the restrictions the defense says attended the sale. I will consider it further, however."

Says Wilson Opposed Monopoly.

"The germ of the plan to break up the German monopoly and to prevent a German monopoly lay in Woodrow Wilson, and he transmitted the idea to Palmer and Garvin," said Mr. Guthrie of counsel for the Foundation. "President Wilson originated the idea that in a future war neither a German nor an American monopoly should impair the conduct of the war.

"That was why Congress gave him wide powers. The American people and Congress were behind him, ready to give him all the powers he required in the conduct of the war."

Concluding with a tribute to Palmer, Garvin and others, Mr. Guthrie said:

"No fraud was practiced on President Wilson or Mr. Polk. These men were engaged in the honest, patriotic, exalted purpose of serving their country."

Judge Morris permitted the defense to file a brief by Oct. 29, the Government to submit a reply brief within ten days afterward.

TEXTILE MILLS CUT WORK.

Lawrence Operators Run Only Part Time With Small Forces.

Special to The New York Times.

LAWRENCE, Mass., Oct. 12.—Conditions in the textile market have become such that many of the large mills of this city have been operating with only fractions of their capacities, and prospects are not bright for an immediate resumption of normal operations.

The Everett Mills, employing about 3,000 hands, announced yesterday that the mill would go on the three days a week schedule, commencing next week, and continue until such time as business conditions warrant a resumption of the old schedule. The lack of demand for the products of the company has been given as the reason for the curtailment.

Few other Lawrence mills are working full time, while the majority are working only three or four days a week, with greatly reduced forces.

SOLD BY FEDERAL BANKS

Advances to Farmers This Year Practically Double the Amount Advanced Last Year.

The Federal intermediate credit banks have sold a second issue of $10,000,000 intermediate debentures, proceeds to be used in furthering co-operative marketing by wheat growers, according to announcement yesterday by Commissioner Cooper of the Federal Farm Loan Board. As an evidence of the growth of the co-operative farming method, he said, are figures compiled by the Government agency showing that up to Sept. 30, this year, farmers had received advances totaling practically double the amount that was advanced up to Nov. 30 last year by the War Finance Corporation. This increase, he explained, was due entirely to increased use of these facilities by farmers and not to any change in loaning methods, the War Finance Corporation having taken care of farm needs promptly.

The debentures are dated Sept. 14 and are due on March 14, 1924. They become payable one day in advance of March 15, which is the income tax payment date, and this is considered as likely to make them more attractive to persons who would wish to accumulate funds for that payment. According to Commissioner Cooper, the intermediate credit banks are having their principal call from the co-operative marketing concerns.

The banks purchasing this issue are the National City Bank, Guaranty Trust Company, Chase National Bank, Hanover National Bank, National Bank of Commerce, Bankers Trust Company, New York Trust Company, Bank of Manhattan and the Chemical National Bank, all of New York; the Old Colony Trust Company of Boston, the Chicopee National Bank of Springfield, Mass.; the Philadelphia National Bank, the Merchants' National Bank, Baltimore; the Union Trust Company of Cleveland, the First Trust and Savings Bank and the Continental and Commercial Trust Company of Chicago, the Citizens Union National Bank, and the National Bank of Kentucky, the Hibernia Bank and Trust Company of New Orleans, the First National Bank and the National Bank of Commerce of St. Louis, the First National Bank and the Merchants' National Bank of St. Paul, Minn.; the First Wisconsin National Bank of Milwaukee, the Old National Bank and Exchange National Bank of Spokane and the First National Bank of Portland, Ore.

WHEAT GOES HIGHER IN NORTHWEST BIDS

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Oct. 12.—Winnipeg, Minneapolis and Duluth wheat markets were open today, with a slightly higher range, prices being up to ½@¾ early with a reaction, and closed ¼@¾ higher in Winnipeg.

The big discounts at which Winnipeg wheat is selling under Minneapolis is attracting attention and spreading operations are increased. A more confident feeling exists in wheat values at Winnipeg despite the large receipts.

The country movement continues active, and liberal shipments are being made from Fort William and Port Arthur, the wheat moving out as fast as it is cleaned. The Saskatchewan rains have delayed threshing and may reduce the quality.

Winnipeg messages say that the Government influence in strengthening wheat values in American markets is having its effect there, and at the same time they report increased hedging sales, which are being taken care of by purchases by millers, exporters and Eastern speculators.

Corn at Minneapolis was $1.05 to $1.09 for yellow. One car of new corn has reached Minneapolis from Southern Minnesota and sold at 56 cents. Chicago is expecting some new corn Saturday or Monday.

CHANCE OF RECOVERY IN ENGLAND'S TRADE

London Economist Sees Signs of Rapid Improvement on European Settlement.

The monthly review on the state of trade published toward the end of September by The London Economist remarks that "there is prevalent a widespread belief that all the conditions for a return to prosperity are present, and if only the clouds could be dispelled in Europe there would be a rapid improvement in trade. Indeed, if the outlook may be said to have changed at all in the last two months, it is in the direction of increased confidence that, even under circumstances which we may hope to hold and consolidate during the Winter the ground gained during the first half of the year.

"Definite evidence of pronounced improvement is not very easy to find, and the slightly more optimistic outlook may perhaps be based on nothing more than the feeling that depression cannot last forever."

THE BUSINESS WORLD

Hosiery Market Is Dull.

Regardless of the number of buyers reported in the market, business in all lines of hosiery, especially silk goods, has experienced a decided slowing down in the last week. According to the special bulletin of the National Association of Hosiery and Underwear Manufacturers, buyers who really did considerable business in September have reverted to their old policy of shopping and talking, once in a while placing an order of sorts where the price is right. Re-orders and hand-to-mouth trading continue to bring in a fair volume of business, but the future delivery books, if the remarks of several downtown selling agents may be taken as a criterion, still show plenty of white space.

Lace Neckwear Greatly Liked.

Orders placed by women's neckwear buyers for the holiday season presage the biggest demand for lace goods of this kind that has been seen for some time by the trade. Collar and cuff sets of dainty French and Belgian laces are especially in favor in the high-priced merchandise, many of the pieces showing the combination of the sheerest laces with the heavier ones. Lace is often used as insets and panels with other materials. Irish crochet lace is frequently seen. Among the more moderately-priced goods are sets which show touches of lace on a net background, with tucking for further elaboration. Deep cream, or mocha, is favored over white in the color trend.

Retail Coal Stocks Low.

Evidence of the low state of retail stocks is found in the firmness of independent anthracite in the domestic sizes, Saward's Journal will say today. It was quite generally expected that prices would begin to ease off once production was back to normal, following the three weeks' shutdown in September, but as yet they have shown no signs of a recession. Although not a great many dealers are looking for this class of tonnage at any one time, there is always a new crop of customers springing up to take the place of those whose orders are filled. Cutting down the bituminous supply to fit the demand is proving a slow and painful process.

More Buyers Next Week?

It is the general belief among garment wholesalers that the coming week will be one in which the number of buyers in the market will be considerably increased. It is fast coming to the period when much cooler weather should set in and, as the retailers have only covered their requirements for a short period ahead, practically only for the early Fall, the expectation is that a period of greater buying activity is just ahead. The slowness with which the dressy coats have moved so far is what is bothering the trade, and it is in these that the demand is looked upon to register a sharp pick-up. Sports coats and jacquettes have moved well, and the demand for them has been a no small factor in keeping sales totals up.

Retail Credit Men to Meet.

He will speak on conditions in Siberia as related to the general economic situation. Among the topics to be dealt with from before the business session will be the complete report of the committee in charge of the association's annual dinner, which is to be given on Saturday, Nov. 10. A program of entertainment at next week's dinner has also been drawn up.

Using New Display Idea.

One of the latest novelties in window display is being used by one wholesaler and a well-known Fifth Avenue store to good effect. The idea is that of having a background on which is outlined a single scene, with spaces cut to show figures silhouetted. The latter are garbed in the actual merchandise to be featured and by contrast stand out very prominently. The wholesaler using the device sells gloves and, in two realistic scenes—one of a woman before a waiting taxi and the other of a group before a steamer rail—the desired effect of making the gloves stand out to attract attention is thoroughly achieved. The department store features in its display one of its new suit models, the scene showing a girl coming out of Sherry's. The garment's details are very cleverly silhouetted.

Silk Appeal Has No Effect.

The recent appeal to the Japanese Government to permit the shipment of raw silk from ports other than Yokohama has resulted in no change, and that city continues to arrive to hold its former position as the chief export centre, according to a cable received by the Silk Association of America from D. E. Douty, general manager of the United States Testing Company. The cable adds: "Arrivals are steadily increasing, but shipments per steamer during September and October are much below needs. Exporters claim that filatures hold for better prices and cannot buy at present sufficient for requirements." Mr. Douty, who is now in Shanghai, has been in the devastated districts of Japan since shortly after the earthquake.

Stores Did Well Yesterday.

Yesterday proved to be one of the best the local stores have had since the opening of the Fall season. While the weather was still of a mild character, there was a keen interest shown in Fall garments, according to store officials, and the net results for the day were eminently satisfactory. There is still much to be desired in the retail garment

Stores Did Well Yesterday.

Yesterday proved to be one of the best the local stores have had since the opening of the Fall season. While the weather was still of a mild character, there was a keen interest shown in Fall garments, according to store officials, and the net results for the day were eminently satisfactory. There is still much to be desired in the retail garment

Retail Coal Stocks Low.

Evidence of the low state of retail stocks is found in the firmness of independent anthracite in the domestic sizes, Saward's Journal will say today. It was quite generally expected that prices would begin to ease off once production was back to normal, following the three weeks' shutdown in September, but as yet they have shown no signs of a recession. Although not a great many dealers are looking for this class of tonnage at any one time, there is always a new crop of customers springing up to take the place of those whose orders are filled. Cutting down the bituminous supply to fit the demand is proving a slow and painful process.

More Buyers Next Week?

It is the general belief among garment wholesalers that the coming week will be one in which the number of buyers in the market will be considerably increased. It is fast coming to the period when much cooler weather should set in and, as the retailers have only covered their requirements for a short period ahead, practically only for the early Fall, the expectation is that a period of greater buying activity is just ahead. The slowness with which the dressy coats have moved so far is what is bothering the trade, and it is in these that the demand is looked upon to register a sharp pick-up. Sports coats and jacquettes have moved well, and the demand for them has been a no small factor in keeping sales totals up.

A program of entertainment at next week's dinner has also been drawn up.

Using New Display Idea.

One of the latest novelties in window display is being used by one wholesaler and a well-known Fifth Avenue store to good effect. The idea is that of having a background on which is outlined a single scene, with spaces cut to show figures silhouetted. The latter are garbed in the actual merchandise to be featured and by contrast stand out very prominently. The wholesaler using the device sells gloves and, in two realistic scenes—one of a woman before a waiting taxi and the other of a group before a steamer rail—the desired effect of making the gloves stand out to attract attention is thoroughly achieved. The department store features in its display one of its new suit models, the scene showing a girl coming out of Sherry's. The garment's details are very cleverly silhouetted.

Silk Appeal Has No Effect.

The recent appeal to the Japanese Government to permit the shipment of raw silk from ports other than Yokohama has resulted in no change, and that city continues to arrive to hold its former position as the chief export centre, according to a cable received by the Silk Association of America from D. E. Douty, general manager of the United States Testing Company. The cable adds: "Arrivals are steadily increasing, but shipments per steamer during September and October are much below needs. Exporters claim that filatures hold for better prices and cannot buy at present sufficient for requirements." Mr. Douty, who is now in Shanghai, has been in the devastated districts of Japan since shortly after the earthquake.

Loss of moment took place in the textile trades during the week than for a long time, partly due to the interruption of the holiday. Unfinished gray goods showed a weaker tone, with first hands the principal sellers, and there were signs of a slightly easier feeling in some of the burlaps.

DENIES MORE CREDIT IS NEED OF FARMER

Loan Chief at Inquiry Into Rural Banks Says His Funds Are Ample.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 12.—The troubles of the farmer were laid today before the Joint Congressional Committee inquiring into the failure of the State banks to join the Federal Reserve System.

Governor Cooper of the Farm Loan Board, B. C. Powell of Little Rock, Ark., representing the American Cotton Association; T. H. Atkeson, representing the National Grange, and Benjamin C. Marsh of the Farmers' National Council, were heard by the committee on various phases of banking as applied to agriculture.

Contrary to the impression that the farmers need additional financial aid, their general credit condition has improved during the last year, Governor Cooper said. During the twelve months, he declared, they borrowed less money than in the preceding year.

According to Mr. Cooper, the Farm Loan Board has received acceptable demands for only $15,000,000 so far this year, although it had further commitments which probably would bring the total to $40,000,000. This amounted to only one-half of the money it held available to assist agriculture.

Most of the demands for loans have come from the South and Far West, Mr. Cooper added, generally through farmers' co-operative associations. There had been no great demand, he said, for credit in the Middle west.

Charges by Representative Strong, Republican, Kansas, that there had been unnecessary delays in the negotiations of loans by the board, were denied by Mr. Cooper, who insisted that the board would be amply able to take care of every legitimate demand made upon it without using more than one-half of the fund it has available.

Country banks remain outside the Federal Reserve System, Mr. Powell testified, because they would receive no interest on their deposit should they join that system and also because they resent what they considered attempts to coerce them into agreeing to the par collection of checks.

Mr. Powell urged the committee to hold meetings outside of Washington so as to get in touch with country bankers, and to make every possible effort to impress upon them the benefits which would come by joining the system. New York banks, he asserted, are paying salaries as high as $25,000 to men whose business it is to induce banks to remain outside.

Mr. Marsh said there was a general belief among country bankers that many of the disasters suffered by the farmers in recent years had been largely due to the Federal Reserve System.

Mr. Atkeson brought to the attention of the committee what seemed to him improper methods used by the system to force par collection of checks.

FIGHTS COST SYSTEM BAN.

United Typothetae Carries Trade Commission's Ruling to Court.

CHICAGO, Oct. 12 (Associated Press).—A petition to set aside the recent order of the Federal Trade Commission directing the United Typothetae of America to cease using its standard cost system was filed in the United States Circuit Court of Appeals today by counsel for the typothetae. The fate of cost-finding methods of scores of trade associations was said to be involved.

Explaining its suit, the typothetae through its attorney, Chester Arthur Legg, issued the following statement:

"The typothetae seeks a decision from the court as to whether the Federal Trade Commission can place the collection and dissemination of cost statistics by trade associations in the same category as the interchange of selling prices, which the Supreme Court in the Hardwood Lumber and Linseed Oil cases has held illegal.

"On the court's decision hangs the fate of the cost-finding methods in the respective industries, undertaken during and after the war largely upon the recommendation of the Federal Trade Commission."

Edward T. Miller, Secretary of the typothetae, said:

"We interpreted the order of the Federal Trade Commission as meaning that the interchange of production cost statistics between members of trade associations is in the same class as the interchange of selling prices, recently declared unlawful. Even the most superficial consideration shows them to be totally dissimilar and we proposed to test this proposition in the courts."

Stockholders' Trustees Allege Mismanagement of Oil Company.

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 12.—Petition for an ancillary receiver to take charge of the local assets of the Indiahoma Refining Company, which has a capital stock of $5,000,000 outstanding, was filed in Federal Court here today. The petition states the company has borrowed $347,850, giving a lien on refined and crude oil in storage and in transit as security and has pledged tank car equipment as security for trust notes on which a balance of $287,628 is due. The petition asserts the company has additional current unsecured liabilities of approximately $1,000,000.

Assets of $9,737,836 are carried on the books of the company, but the petition alleges the actual value of these assets is less than $1,000,000.

GUARDS ROUND UP SAILORS.

Grill Service Men on Broadway in Search for Impostors.

Attempt late Thursday night to round up men who have been begging in the "white light district" in the uniforms of sailors and marines caused discomfort to many genuine sailors and marines who were in the city to attend the world series games.

Marine guards in full uniform and with side-arms entered cabarets, restaurants and theatre lobbies and questioned every sailor and marine they met. Those who proved their identity and their right to be absent from their stations were permitted to go; others were marched away.

Six sailors and one marine were detained at the West 20th Street station until the arrival of naval intelligence officers who cross-questioned them. All of the sailors gave satisfactory explanations and were allowed to go, but the marine was held for further investigation.

$2,000 BLAZE ON TRUCK.

Load of Furniture Burns While Driver is at Luncheon.

While the driver was at luncheon yesterday, twenty-five pieces of furniture loaded on a two-horse truck left standing in front of the furniture factory of P. Nathan & Co., 160 Hester Street, caught fire and were destroyed, with a loss of $2,000. Burning excelsior blown from the wagon set fire to a cornice over a drug store on the ground floor of 164-166 Hester Street. This second fire was extinguished quickly by a dishpan brigade of housewives.

The driver, David Jaeger, returned to the wagon just as the fire gained headway, unhitched the horses and led them to safety. He said he had seen two boys near the truck just before the fire started.

GARDNER ATTACKS WATER POWER PLEA

Declares Defeat of Proposed Amendment No. 3 Would Not Be Handicap.

SAYS LAW IS AMPLE NOW

Location of Stations Along the Rivers Already Permitted, He Declares.

The defeat of proposed constitutional amendment No. 3 to permit the development of water power in the State forest reserve would not deprive the water power interests of opportunity to harness the waters of the Hudson, Mohawk, Black and other rivers, Frank S. Gardner, secretary of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation, declared yesterday. Mr. Gardner said that the location of power stations on the rivers would bring them nearer to the centres of population and make long transmission lines unnecessary.

"Senator Henry M. Sage of Albany is a defender of the proposed constitutional amendment," Mr. Gardner said. "First he says that owing to the differing theories of development and operation of water power year has followed year with nothing accomplished. Then he contradicts himself and tells the public that a real step forward was taken when the law was passed creating river regulating districts. Then he mentions three of the greatest rivers of the State which are now under river regulating boards, which, he declares, will tremendously increase the potential and usable energy of the streams. That the potential and usable energy of the Hudson River, the Black River and the Mohawk River is in the way of being 'tremendously increased' would seem to be a substantial accomplishment. And this he declares has been done under the law creating river regulating boards, that is to say, the law and Constitution as at present existing. Then with strange reasoning, or without reason, he bewails that 'we shall see our white coal going to waste as in the past.'

"This is begging the question and misleading the public, for under the same law by which the river regulating boards were created on the Hudson, Black and Mohawk Rivers, like boards may be created on every river in the State and 'their potential and usable energy also tremendously increased.' It is a fact, as the creation of the three regulating districts referred to by the Senator fully proves, that there is now no lack of provision in the Constitution or in the law to have the 'white coal' of the State developed and used to its utmost. There is nothing in the State Constitution which prevents water storage in the State.

"The policy and plan of the law is to build by river regulating districts the storage reservoirs that may be necessary in a district, the district embracing one or more watersheds. These reservoirs may be built upon ponds and lakes anywhere in the Forest Preserve."

HUGHES SEES AMITY IN LATIN AMERICA

Tells Women's Conference Our Relations With Southern Republics Were Never Better.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 12.—Relations between the United States and its sister republics to the south were never more "satisfactory or carried better promise of mutual good-will," Secretary Hughes said here tonight, speaking at the Columbus Day conference of the Pan-American International Women's Committee.

"I say this," he added, "after taking into account the complaining utterances that find place from time to time in the press and the criticism of those mentors and publicists who supply the tang which gives relish to our intellectual repasts. The millennium itself would turn out to be a tame affair if no fault could be found with it."

Mr. Hughes said he was happy to say that there are no controversies with any of our sister republics which have not been settled or are not in process of adjustment." He called attention to the resumption of diplomatic relations with Mexico, the establishment recently of "an accord with Colombia," and added:

"We are entering upon a period in our relations with Latin-American States notable for the absence of serious grievances."

The Secretary referred to the aid the American Government had been able to give to "the promotion of peace and stability among the countries of Latin America," pointing to the arbitration agreement between Chile and Peru worked out in Washington, and also to the conference of Central American republics and to the plans for withdrawal of American military forces from Santo Domingo.

"Whatever the captious may say, whatever rumors may be stirred, whatever the few anti-American critics may voice," he declared, "I believe it to be fair to say that the Governments and peoples of our sister republics fully understand that we cherish no imperialistic purposes, that we are seeking no pretext for interference with their aspirations as free peoples, and that we are sincere and single minded in the desire to promote the interests of peace and to secure the opportunities of mutually beneficial intercourse between independent and prosperous States."

The Secretary expressed regret that the recent Pan-American Conference at Santiago, Chile, had been unable to agree on a program for limitation of armament. He pointed out, however, that the problem of armed forces was "chiefly a European problem."

LAMAR STARTS ON RETURN.

Fugitive "Wolf of Wall Street" Is on Way to Newark.

EL PASO, Tex., Oct. 12.—David Lamar, the "Wolf of Wall Street," began last night his long journey back to New York City, whence he fled eight months ago while under sentence for interfering with foreign commerce during the war. Lamar was jailed here Tuesday after a long chase in the United States, Canada and Mexico.

Marshal Walker of San Antonio ordered the removal of Lamar after the receipt of instructions from New York. Lamar signed a waiver. In the event that commitment papers, mailed from Washington, are not in San Antonio upon the arrival there of the marshal and his prisoner, Walker will wait for further instructions.

Lamar forfeited a $25,000 bond in New York City when he fled.

PREDICTS GRAND JURY WILL EXONERATE WEBB

Investigation of Another 'Suspect' in Death of His Wife Is Anticipated.

While District Attorney Arthur Rowland, who remained at his home in Yonkers yesterday, would make no comment upon the progress of the Grand Jury investigation of the death of Mrs. Gertie Gorman Webb, at the Westchester Biltmore Club on Sept. 23, a person closely connected with the investigation said:

"This matter, of course, is in the hands of the Grand Jury, and neither Mr. Rowland nor the grand jurors are at liberty to make any public statement or reference to it. But I venture the guess that these developments will come within a day or two:

"1. Webb will be completely exonerated of any connection with the death of his wife.

"2. This exoneration may take the form of a presentment handed up to the Supreme Court Justice in charge of the Grand Jury on Monday.

"3. It has already been announced that the formal Coroner's inquest will be held on Tuesday and the case of the death of Mrs. Webb, already reported as natural by the doctors who performed the autopsy, will be confirmed by the formal and official inquest.

"4. Thus it will be determined that there was no ground for the suspicion fostered by Dr. William J. Meyer, who refused to issue a death certificate and who insinuated that poison had been introduced into Mrs. Webb's system by another.

"5. I venture another guess that the Grand Jury will thereupon launch another investigation which may have to do with another suspect who has been mentioned in newspaper stories about the death of Mrs. Webb.

"Many interesting phases of this case have developed and there are still more interesting matters under investigation. These all relate to the suspect uncovered by the authorities in spite of the abuse hurled at them from certain friends of the late Mrs. Webb, all apparently deluded or duped. By whom? That would seem, is what the authorities are seeking to find out.

"This seems not only to be a contest involving the disposition of a $3,000,000 estate, the mysterious death of a woman at a fashionable country club-hotel, but it promises to develop into a medico-legal battle rivaling, if not eclipsing, the cause célèbre of Harry K. Thaw, now an inmate of an asylum in Philadelphia. Coroner Fitzgerald was right when he said, after hearing the report of the autopsy, that this matter promised more public interest and involved a more rooted principle than appeared in the Thaw case. It would seem to me that this matter has just begun."

Dr. Otto Schultze, New York Medical Examiner, who was present at the autopsy, will be called before the Grand Jury on Monday. It is understood that Mr. and Mrs. William T. Hunter, relatives of Mrs. Webb, have requested District Attorney Arthur Rowland to put Dr. Meyer on the witness stand again.

SUSPECT EX-EMPLOYES OF S. P. TRAIN HOLD-UP

Officials Believe That Trainmen Were Killed Because They Recognized the Bandits.

REDDING, Cal., Oct. 12.—The wooded peaks of the Siskiyous, on the border between Oregon and California, are believed to shelter a little group of men who late yesterday held up Southern Pacific Train No. 13 and killed three trainmen and the mail clerk. Posses from Oregon and California counties are seeking them. Among the posse men are Oregon National Guardsmen.

From all available indications, the trainmen were shot down in cold blood because they recognized the robbers, whom officials believe to be former railroad employes or men familiar with the operation of trains and with the country around Tunnel 13, seventeen miles south of Ashland, Ore., where the hold-up took place.

The mail clerk, Elvyn E. Dougherty of Ashland had no chance for his life. He barricaded himself in his car and the robbers either threw a fused explosive through a window or set off a blast at the door. The car was wrecked and mail pouches destroyed. Fire followed. The mail clerk's body was charred beyond recognition.

The concussion of the blast shattered windows in cars farther back and about twenty passengers were cut by flying glass.

The train emerged from the tunnel running slowly. Because a bridge crew was at work near by trainmen felt no apprehension when the train stopped. Then several shots were heard, and in a moment the explosion.

OAKLAND, Cal., Oct. 12.—The Rev. William J. O'Connor of Cincinnati, National Chaplain of the American Legion, played a prominent part in relief work after the hold-up and explosion which claimed four lives on Southern Pacific Train No 13, near Hilts, Cal., yesterday. This became known when the train reached here today.

Father O'Connor was on the second section of the train, which was unmolested. As soon as this section reached the scene and its occupants were informed of the hold-up and explosion Father O'Connor hastened over an intervening hill to the scene. He said prayers over the dead and took charge of the relief of the injured.

DEATH IN BRIDAL PARTY WHEN CAR OVERTURNS

Miss Robertson Is Killed and Five Are Injured in Motor Crash at Leiperville, Pa.

RIDLEY PARK, Pa., Oct. 12.—Death followed a wedding party near Ridley Park today and claimed Miss Marion Robertson of Charleston, S. C., as the result of an automobile accident. Miss Elizabeth Thompson of Greenwich, Conn., a bridesmaid at the marriage of Miss Winifred Morris Sloan of Ridley Park to James W. Lukens, a former football player on the Lafayette College team, was severely injured, receiving a fracture of the skull.

Four others in the party, including Miss Marion M. Sloan, maid of honor and sister of the bride, and Edward Wheeler, a former University of Pennsylvania oarsman, were injured.

The wedding took place at Ridley Park, and it was proposed by some of the guests to escort the bridal couple by automobile as far as Wilmington, Del. Returning from Wilmington through Leiperville, Pa., with Henry Sloan, brother of the bride, at the wheel, the machine fell in behind a roadster driven by a negro. According to Sloan the small car suddenly turned into a side road and before he could swerve to one side his motor crashed into the roadster.

The impact overturned Sloane's car and hurled its occupants to the ground. Miss Robertson was caught beneath the machine.

The cries of the injured brought neighbors, who, with the aid of jacks, lifted the motor car from the unconscious girl. She was brought to a hospital here and died soon afterward.

Others injured were Miss Elizabeth Buse of Ridley Park and Philip Mowry Sweeney of Chester, Pa.

Sloan and Henry Townsend of Leiperville, the driver of the roadster, were held by the authorities pending an investigation.
